BEER HAS COME all the way back. It will be sold in the House in Washington. It is sold openly, on Sundays, no need to seek for a "side door," as in old New York City saloon days. Men that should know predict, even after to bet, that the necessary 36 states will vote to repeal prohibition absolutely and thus take it out of the Constitution. Anything can happen when the people become angry or poor, and especially when both things happen at once.

President Roosevelt's program counts that day lost whose low descending sun views from his hand no employment job begun, gun.

The latest big Roosevelt enterprise, just launched, will develop the great Tennessee basin and put to work Muscle Shoals' power, a plant built with the people's money.

For years Senator Norris of Nebraska, Republican, has demanded that power from the Muscle Shoals plant be sold at a fair price to provide "a yardstick" for charges by other companies. That Republican idea which he swings in main against "sound Republican party conservatism" is to be carried out by a Democratic President.

The "yardstick" will not suit all electric companies.

Airplanes simplify the troubles of nations that rule "inferior peoples."

In French Somaliland, rebellious Abyssinian tribes threaten trouble.

There is no need now to march French soldiers in red pantaloons, making excellent targets, across desert sands.

France sends an airplane carrier loaded with airplanes, each airplane loaded with bombs and machine guns. Shortly after they view and hear those airplanes, the rebellious Abyssinians will feel less rebellious, and will be running in many directions, while the Frenchmen, smiling down on them, will probably not have a scratch. A new kind of war has come, and, sooner or later, this country will learn that its exists. Let us hope it will be sooner, before we play the part of "rebellious Abyssinians."

Italy reports an airplane speed of 431 miles per hour. Mussolini's government may be poor in cash, compared to some others, but it isn't poor in common sense and spends courageously where national safety is concerned. How pitiful our American air marks seem compared with this Italian speed, that would go around the world at the equator in 60 hours. In Italy the government promotes aviation and supplies the necessary money, making tests that will mean air supremacy.

England also has the aviation intelligence, lacking here, and has not hesitated to spend $1,000,000 and more preparing for one single race for the "Schneider cup."

Prof. Einstein has accepted an appointment in the University of Madrid. Great scientist, and a loyal citizen of the German republic, Prof. Einstein is driven out merely because he is of the Jewish race. They actually searched his house for deadly weapons. As well search the nest of a dove.

Einstein is welcomed and honored in Spain, a country that has gone through centuries of commercial and industrial decline and sterility because it formerly drove out the Jews, as Germany is doing now. Spain, apparently, has learned something Germany will learn later.

Baron Von Papen, representing Hitler's government, formerly a member of the "Center" or Catholic party in Germany and himself a Catholic, is in Rome discussing with the Vatican authorities a friendly understanding between Hitler's government and the Vatican.

The Pope may receive Von Papen tomorrow. Meanwhile he is discussing details with the Papal secretary of state.

The Vatican receives Von Papen and his suggestions calmly, for it has met other dictators seeking its approval since, and before, Napoleon, who restored the rights of the church for his own protection, and Mussolini, who restored the Pope's temporal power.

It was suggested here, that if, instead of dodging in various directions to escape the electric and wind storm, the Akron had put straight out to sea at top speed, it might have been saved.

It develops now that the course of the ship was changed two or three times in 45 minutes after lightning was seen 30 miles to the south. Finally an order, given by mistake, or misinterpreted, sent the ship into the peak of the storm.

Pope Opposes Nazi Attacks

VON PAPEN IS TOLD VIEWS OF VATICAN

Vatican Frowns on Attacks on Jews or Catholics

By GUGLIELMO EMANUEL

Rome, April 11 (INS)—Vice Chancellor von Papen, who arrived in Rome Sunday morning as a special emissary of the Hitler government, has been informed in his preliminary contacts with Vatican officials, that the Holy See cannot countenance discrimination by the Nazis against either Jews or Catholics in Germany.

This was learned authoritatively by International News Service today.

SEEK VATICAN AID

Von Papen came here ostensibly on a personal visit but is to remain a week, during which he will be received by Pope Pius and hold further conferences with Premier Mussolini. He has already called on Il Duce, offering Germany's support to the Italian premier's plan for four-power control of Europe to insure peace, and paving the way for the forthcoming visit of Chancellor Hitler, who is also expected to be received by both the Pope and Mussolini.

Capt. Herman Wilhelm Goering, minister without portfolio in the Hitler cabinet, and regarded as a leader in that faction of the German government favoring energetic action against the Jews, arrived yesterday by plane from Munich, presumably to discuss outstanding political problems with Premier Mussolini.

Despite the extreme reserve about their comings and goings, it is learned the visitors are seeking to obtain Vatican support for what they maintain is the "wait and see" policy adopted by the German episcopate toward Nazi activities.

The Nazi campaign was not discussed at von Papen's interview with Cardinal Pacelli, Papal secretary of state, yesterday. Nevertheless, it was learned that Cardinal Pacelli, while listening sympathetically to the German vice-chancellor's argument that Hitler is chiefly concerned with stamping out communism with the Reich, will make himself known to von Papen that the Vatican disapproves discriminatory policies against any racial or religious minority.

DISBANDING ASKED

In yesterday's conversations Von Papen urged upon the papal secretary of state the advisability of the Vatican strengthening its religious forces throughout Germany by what he guardedly termed "devaluating" its political work. This statement, construed as a mild suggestion that the Catholic Center party in Germany be disbanded, assuring Hitler of a stronger hold upon the electorate, met with no response at all.

Before Cardinal Pacelli commits himself upon all the questions involved he desires a personal conference with the Papal Nuncio at Berlin, from whom he will receive a report on the views of the German Episcopate.

Prayers for Roosevelt on 'President's Day'

National thanksgiving for the inspiring leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and national prayer for the success of his constructive policies, is the two-fold object of a movement inaugurated today by the Boston Evening American and Hearst papers from Coast to Coast.

Citizens of all classes and all denominations were asked to take part in a joint religious observance on Sunday, April 30, which would be known as President's Day.

HEALTH AND GUIDANCE

Religious organizations were asked to join in the common bond of belief in a Supreme Being to give thanks that the White House now shelters a man whose interests and efforts are directed toward the welfare of the average citizen.

In addition, by a common prayer, they would ask for him, health, strength and guidance that he may see his program for national relief brought to a successful conclusion.

Under the plan, religious, civic and even political groups would conduct their own observance in churches or synagogues. At the moment attention is focused on April 30 as President's Day, but it is pointed out that the observance might well become an annual

JAPS CAPTURE LENGKOW CITY

Tokio, April 11 (AP)—A smashing Japanese attack along a 200-mile stretch of the Great Wall of China was reported to have resulted finally in the capture of the city of Lengkow today.

Massed Chinese concentrations had stubbornly resisted assaults at this point for a month, the Japanese admitted.

The Japanese War Office announced the last Great Wall stronghold, Lengkow, about 50 miles west of the Yellow Sea, was taken over by its troops this morning. The immediate objective of the drive launched yesterday was to prevent Chinese rushing reinforcements to Lengkow.

Even so, about 50,000 Chinese troops were already in the Lengkow area. Gen. Shang Chen, former governor of Shansi Province, and Gen. Sung Cheh-Yuan, a power in northwest China, led the defenders.

NICKEL BEER BLOCKED BY HIGH TAX

Impossible to Sell It at That Figure, Brewers Say

Pictures on Pages 2, 3 and 5

Investigation into the price of beer and the quality of some of the beverage for which allegedly exorbitant prices are being charged will be started today by Director Ralph W. Robart of the state division of the necessaries of life.

He announced that today he planned to visit breweries and wholesalers and retailers of the beverage. Several of his assistants will also be assigned to the work.

PRICE TOO HIGH, SAYS ROBART

"The most effective way to justify the return of beer is to get it to all the people at a reasonable price," Robart said. "At present the beverage is a rich man's drink, due probably to the fact that there is a lack of competition in the sales, combined with the unusual demand. The price, however, should be reduced."

He declared the present price is too high and pointed to the fact that the margin of profit appeared excessive when beer is costing retailers 10½ cents a bottle. He said he had received scores of complaints from legislators, labor leaders and private citizens regarding the present prices, which they claimed savored of profiteering.

Director Robart also revealed that he had received a number of complaints regarding the quality of the beer for which the high prices are being charged. It is claimed that the quality is not as good as that of near beer.

BUSY ON LICENSES

Commr. Hayes said the commission would leave complaints regarding excessive prices to other departments. He also received a complaint regarding the sale of inferior beer was made to the commission yesterday.

He said the matter of issuing licenses would be disposed of before the commission took up any new problems resulting from the sale of beer in the State.

The commission was busy all day considering the mass of applications for licenses. A total of 219 were issued, including 64 wholesale licenses, 25 express licenses, 126 truck licenses and 10 foreign manufacturers' licenses. This brought in a total of $19,116 in addition to the $24,575 collected Saturday.

The Boston licensing board issued 12 additional licenses for the sale of beer. In addition, 680 applications were sent to police for investigation. These will probably

Three Held in Shooting to Death of Maine Man

Portland, Me., April 11—Two women and a man were held for questioning today as police sought to unravel the mystery around the death of Charles Hall, 52, Peaks Island stationary engineer.

Hall died from a bullet through the head, whether by suicide or murder the investigators had been unable to determine early today.

DIES IN HOSPITAL

Mrs. Grace Hall, wife of the dead man; Mrs. Donald L. Anderson, his daughter, and the latter's husband, were the three held. They were grilled into the early hours today and then detained at police headquarters for further questioning.

Hall died in a hospital here after police had taken him from his home on Peaks Island. Mrs. Hall said her husband committed suicide after a family argument over weeds in the family garden.

While Mrs. Hall and the Anderson couple were under questioning of Police Chief Ralph Brooks and County Attorney Walter M. Tapley, other investigators searched the Hall home to check on the stories told by all three.

Until an autopsy is completed by Medical Examiner William Holt, no decision will be made as to whether the death was suicide or murder, police said.

Mrs. Hall told police her husband, her daughter, son-in-law and herself were seated in the kitchen of the home when the argument arose over the weeds.

WIFE'S OWN STORY

Hall stalked angrily from the kitchen and went to his room upstairs, she continued. A few minutes later a shot was heard and she ran upstairs to investigate. Her husband, she told police, brandished a smoking revolver at her and forced her to flee.

Hall was found a short time later at the foot of the stairway that leads off his bedroom.

U. S. PROBER'S HOME BOMBED

New York, April 11 (AP)—A dynamite explosion early today wrecked the front of the home of William Geisler, Department of Justice agent, who is engaged in confidential investigations here.

The blast broke windows in 19 houses nearby and threw a residential neighborhood of Elmhurst, Queens, into panic.

Geisler said he saw three automobiles speed past the house shortly before the explosion. He refused to tell the nature of the investigations he has been making.

"They are of a confidential nature," he said.

Geisler's wife and daughter were asleep and he was sitting in his living room when the blast rocked the neighborhood. It tore the porch off the Geisler house, and shattered every window in it. Police expressed belief the explosive was a dynamite stick.

WOMAN AND 3 CHILDREN CARRIED TO SAFETY

Hemmed in by Smoke in Burning House in Bowen St.

Two small children an elderly woman and a boy were carried to safety by firemen today after they were trapped in a burning dwelling in Bowen st., South Boston.

The children, Charles Carlson, 6, and his brother, William, 5, narrowly escaped burns as the flames crept perilously close to their bed.

In the other half of the double house Mrs. Julia Ahearn, 63, and her grandson, Joseph Perkins, 13, were hemmed in by smoke and feared to attempt escape over the stairway until firemen arrived.

Ladders were raised to both sides of the house in the belief that the four would have to be carried out, but other firemen, who raced up the stairway, found they could take the occupants out that way.

John Carlson, father of the trapped children, was found on the first floor, vainly trying to battle his way through the smoke to the rescue of his sons.

The upper section of both sides of the house was burning briskly when apparatus arrived. A second alarm was considered for a time on account of the congestion in the district, but firemen confined the blaze to the building.

The four rescued suffered somewhat from hysteria, but they soon recovered when the excitement was over. Police and firemen aided them into the home of neighbors.

Firemen said the blaze started from an overheated chimney between the two sections of the house. They estimated damage at $4500.

Woman Remembers How to Breathe

Chicago, April 11 (INS)—Mrs. Caroline La Plante, the woman who "forgot how to breathe," today was able to inhale and exhale without the assistance of a Drinker respirator for a 30-minute period every three hours.

Physicians noted a definite improvement in the woman's condition, which is attributed to a brain infection. Six doctors are studying the strange malady, which began 31 days ago.

During the periods when she is removed from the "iron lung" Mrs. Le Plante has to be "reminded" at intervals to breathe. A nurse stands beside her, ready to prompt the breathing process when it lapses.

WILEY DISAGREES WITH COURSE OF AKRON SKIPPER

INEXPERIENCED MAN IN CHARGE OF ELEVATORS

Might Have Dodged Storm by "Staying Over Land"

Lakehurst, N. J., April 11 (INS)—Inquiry by a naval board into the disaster that befell the dirigible Akron with a loss of 73 lives centered again today on the story of Lieut.-Commdr. Herbert V. Wiley, one of the three survivors, who was scheduled to resume the witness stand.

Highlights of the testimony of Wiley so far, were:

1—That an order was misunderstood by the helmsmen when the Akron was trying to dodge the thunderstorm that had sprung up. Wiley said Commdr. Frank C. McCord, the Akron's master, told him he ordered a 15-degree change in course to the left but that the helmsman misunderstood and swung left 50 degrees about two hours after the ship left Lakehurst. The take-off was about 7:45 p. m.

TAKE OFF UNFAVORABLE

2—That an inexperienced man was at one of the elevator controls. From which the ship's altitude was determined when she was battling the storm prior to her sudden crash into the sea off Barnegat, N. J., early last Tuesday morning.

3—That the Akron took off from Lakehurst when conditions were anything but favorable. The weather map disclosed a low pressure area over Michigan and a windstrip extending south to Cincinnati, and Wiley ordered 17,300 pounds of additional water ballast placed aboard the ship before it took off.

THOUGHT COURSE WRONG

4—That late that night when lightning was cracking no would have taken a different course than that decided upon by Commander McCord. Wiley said he would have shifted west, toward land, rather than east toward sea. It was purely a matter of opinion, McCord, he explained, was thoroughly competent and probably deemed it inadvisable to come in over land because it might be dangerous to fly over tall structures such as the Empire State Building in New York city in view of conditions then prevailing. He was not criticising anyone's judgment, he asserted.

5—There was no panic, no confusion or any loss of discipline at any time during the ill-fated voyage. Wiley praised Commander McCord highly. He was asked if he thought "drastic action" was advisable when the ship reached 800 feet on its second descent shortly before the crash. He thought so. But he had this to say, too:

PICTURE OF DISCIPLINE

"I have been trying to give a picture of the discipline and actions in the control car. I cannot definitely answer some questions regarding, for example, the dropping of ballast.

"I am sure the court realizes it would have been a violation of discipline for me to have gone over and taken part in the dropping of ballast when the captain and lieutenant were already doing so. I continued at my usual station at the rudder."

Wiley's voice broke with emotion at times, especially when he talked about his comrades.

Has the Old 5-cent Drink Gone Forever?

City Councillor ALBERT L. FISH

BULLETIN

City Councillor Fish today introduced an order which, if approved by the committee and the council, would put the council on record as favoring the sale of a 10-ounce glass of beer for five cents in Boston.

WHEN WILL THE OLD 5-CENT DRINK BE THE ORDER? Labor demands a five-cent glass of beer—and not too much head, at that. Plenty good beer in a glass for five cents is the union labor demand. Members of the city council demand cheap beer. They favor 10-ounce drink for one nickel. Members of the legislature also say we are paying too much for our beer. They indicate legislative action will be started soon.

MACON READY FOR TESTS

Akron, O., April 11 (AP)—The U. S. S. Macon was ready today for the inspection of a naval board headed by Rear Admiral George Day, just one week after her sister ship, the U. S. S. Akron, plunged into the Atlantic and was destroyed.

Naval officers expressed opinion that Lieut. Commdr. H. V. Wiley, a survivor of the Akron crash, would complete his testimony before a court of inquiry at Lakehurst, N. J., in time to come here for the Macon's first trial flight, scheduled for Thursday morning, weather permitting.

The naval inspection board headed by Admiral Day is expected to arrive here tomorrow.

Workmen at the air dock finished polishing up the Macon's interior yesterday and mechanics gave the ship's telephone system its final test.

EVERETT BEER STAND FLAYED

The Everett licensing situation, in which the Board of Aldermen challenges the right of Mayor Michael C. O'Neill to issue licenses for the sale of beer, is still unsettled today.

Last night a crowd of more than 1000 stormed City Hall there in a wild demonstration while the aldermen discussed the matter of granting licenses for the sale of beer. About 500 secured admission to the hall to hear the board reject the names of the Liquor Licensing Commission as sent to them by Mayor O'Neill.

Insisting that the aldermen had the right to issue licenses, Alderman George F. Pierce said he would ask the State Alcoholic Beverages Commission to investigate the Everett situation.

Eight licenses have already been issued by Mayor O'Neill on the basis of a ruling of the city solicitor that he had this power. However, as far as could be learned none of the licensees have been able to procure any beer from the breweries.

NICKEL BEER IMPOSSIBLE

With a concerted demand arising on all sides for lower prices of beer, representatives of the "new" Boston brewing establishments declared a nickel glass of beer could not be made available under the present system of taxation.

Thomas F. Maguire of the Haffenreffer Brewery stated that retailers could profit selling beer at 5½ cents a bottle but that it would be impossible to sell draught beer at five cents for a large glass with the present taxes in effect.

Joseph E. Doherty, of the Commercial Brewery, declared that when the budget was balanced, taxes reduced and some of the present regulations lifted the public would be able to buy a 12-ounce glass of beer for five cents. At present he said it was impossible for the retailer to sell at less than one cent an ounce.

FIGHT ON FOR BEER

The refusal of Mayor William White, of Lawrence, to allow licenses there until the city can borrow sufficient funds to carry on municipal activities has resulted in the filing of a bill with the House by Reps. Thomas J. Lane and Michael Jordan, both of Lawrence.

The bill seeks a change in the beer statute to authorize the Lawrence City Council to order the granting of licenses.

Chicago Gang Chiefs Unite in War to Control Breweries

Chicago, April 11 (AP)—Declaring organized gangsters have prepared a united front to attempt control of the legal beer industry, the Employers' Association called upon Chicago business men for "a battle to the finish."

"The advent of legal beer," the association said in a statement, "signalizes the opening of one of the deadliest battles that has yet developed on the hoodlum front.

"The hoodlum bosses of the rackets will now go into action in the new field of legitimate beer, prepared for the battle of their lives.

"It is going to be a battle which law enforcement authorities and legitimate business interests outside the brewing industry can not view with detachment or unconcern.

"Racketeers and underworld alcohol criminals are indistinguishable and legitimate business is face to face with a united opposition."

The association listed evidence of gangsters attempting to enter the beer industry, declaring as its first premise that "a considerable section of the truck and transportation field is dominated or controlled by hoodlum forces."

LEADERS BALK AT NEW BANK REFORM BILL

Assailed Because of Lack of Guaranty of Deposits

Washington, April 11 (INS)—Woodin conferred with the Senate banking and currency committee today in an effort to compromise differences over the administration's latest banking reform bill.

He was reported as opposing certain features of the bill, drafted recently by a subcommittee, which included Sens. Glass and McAdoo, two former secretaries of the treasury. Beside his opposition, the new bill was assailed by House and Senate leaders for failing to carry any protection of deposits in state banks.

The bill, as now drawn, would:

1. Create a federal liquidating corporation to help liquidate banks.

2. Establish an insurance fund in the corporation to serve as a guarantee of deposits in all member banks of the Federal Reserve system.

3. Compel all national and Federal Reserve Banks to divorce their affiliates within five years.

4. Divorce investment banking from commercial banking by prohibiting national and member banks from engaging in the flotation or underwriting of security issues.

5. Create an open market committee to regulate investment purchases of securities by member banks.

6. Authorize the Federal Reserve board to regulate the amount of outstanding loans, secured by collateral, to be held by any member bank.

7. Provide for 15-day loans by Federal Reserve banks to member banks on promissory notes secured by "bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness or Treasury bills," or eligible paper.

8. Provide for ninety-day loans on "notes, drafts, bills of exchange or bankers' acceptances" subject to rediscount in the Federal Reserve system.

MRS. ROOSEVELT JOINS PROTEST

Washington, April 11 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has added her voice to the many who have pronounced unfair that section of the economy act under which married women have been dismissed if their husbands also worked for the government.

Saying that she agreed with a statement on the subject made by Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, Mrs. Roosevelt gave it as her personal view that dismissal should be a question of efficiency and the good of the service.

The mere fact that two married persons were working for the government she produced a poor reason for dismissal of one of them, especially in view of the fact that federal salaries are so low it would take the earnings of two people to say—educate four or five children and support a father and mother.

Lewis W. Douglas, director of the budget, after receiving a national woman's party delegation protesting the "married persons" dismissal law, asked a ruling from the attorney general.

F. D. TO SPEED RAIL RELIEF

Washington, April 11 (AP)—Difficulties confronting the railroad industry are to get immediate consideration from the administration, with President Roosevelt having final say as to the method of extending aid.

So far as federal support is concerned, that apparently has been secured for the period of stress through continued loans.

But the President wants definite action by the roads themselves to bring about economies and put their houses in order. Executives and labor have not agreed on just how this shall be done. Therefore the aides of Mr. Roosevelt who have been struggling with the problem for days, put it before him in a three-hour White House conference last night.

General agreement was reached on the point of designating a federal co-ordinator to guide the carriers through their reorganization, but the President reserved for a later conference final determination upon all angles in the proposed legislation.

PASSPORT RING BARED BY N. Y. ARREST

Kleitz, Held on Steamer, Headed Gang Here, Is Charge

Jacob Kleitz, 43, arrested in New York yesterday as the alleged ringleader of a forged passport ring whose activities centered in Boston, will be brought here today or tomorrow.

Kleitz was arrested aboard the liner President Adams by United States marshals. He had a money belt containing $28,700 on his person at the time of his arrest, and was returning from a trip around the world during which careful surveillance was kept over him by government officials.

The headquarters of the alleged passport ring, which is believed to have aided thousands of aliens to enter the country illegally, is said to be in New York. However, operations of the ring were centered in Boston with agents working from here into all sections of New England, according to federal authorities.

Federal officials declared that agents of the ring travelled extensively in foreign countries, selling passports to aliens who wished to enter the United States. Forged names of dead and non-existent persons were used on the visas.

Federal officials insist their prisoner is Kleitz, although he denies this and declares he is Xavier A. Szpokas, a contractor, which name appears on the passport he was carrying.

DIED IN 1928

The real Szpokas, according to officials, was a Greater Boston resident, who died in 1928.

Asst. U. S. Atty. John M. Senenck declared that the federal government had long been seeking to trap leaders of the ring but the yesterday's arrest was the first important capture they had made. The investigation has been going on for more than a year.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR PRESIDENT

period of contemplation on the part of the country at large.

KNELT IN PRAYER

The religious character of the proposed President's Day is particularly appropriate in view of the strong religious convictions of President Roosevelt himself.

On Inauguration Day, just prior to his induction to the chief magistracy of the United States, the then President-elect and his family went quietly to a Washington church to kneel in prayer.

The President's Day movement has found widespread approval all over the country. In Los Angeles prominent citizens were quick to respond and pledge their support.

Mayor John C. Porter of that city said that at the proper time he will issue a proclamation setting the day aside as President's Day and urging citizens to give thanks and to pray fo rthe President.

"It is a most worthy plan," said ayor Porter. "President Roosevelt has made an outstanding record since his inauguration. He has achieved amazing results, and he has the confidence of the people to a remarkable degree. It is fitting that we express that confidence and our gratitude to him, and that we join in public prayers that his leadership continues to be wise and forceful and successful, that under him we may move back to prosperity and complete the conquest of depression and its woes."

Bishop W. Bertrand, of the Los Angeles diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church, said:

"It is a sound idea and it should be permanent and nonpartisan. There should be a proper relation between religion and government. A day set aside and an opportunity to pledge allegiance in the name of religion is highly commendable."

FAY WEBB BLAMES RUDY FOR SMASH UP OF ROMANCE

DIVORCE MOVE UP TO RUDY, SAYS WIFE

Girl Admirers Hinted by Fay as Reason for Separation

Los Angeles, April 11 (AP)—Fay Webb Vallee returned to southern California with emphatic assertions that she and her husband, Rudy Vallee, are separated "for keeps," and that the trouble was not caused by a $100,000 alienation of affections suit filed against her in New York.

She descended from the train on the arm of her father, Chief of Police Clarence Webb, of Santa Monica, who hurried to New York when he was informed trouble brewed in the Valle establishment.

NO GO, SAYS FAY

"Rudy and his Fay are through for good," she said, "and you may say for me, that that silly law suit has nothing to do with it."

She referred to an action filed by Mrs. Kathleen Leon, charging the brunette wife of the crooner with stealing the affections of Garfield Leon, adagio dancer.

She said she had "tried for two years to get along with Rudy!"

"I've put up with the weird hours his crooning demanded, and the wholesale feminine admiration that was showered on him. But it's no go.

"He got his last chance when he begged me to come back to him from Reno after we separated several months ago. I tried and we couldn't agree, so that's that."

"Yes, that's that," chimed Chief Webb.

"As for Mrs. Leon's suit," Mrs. Vallee pursued, "it's ridiculous. In the first place I never was interested in Garry, except as a friend. In the second place, he has been in Europe for the last year, and in the third place, I haven't been any closer to him in years than to talk over the telephone."

DIVORCE UP TO RUDY

She said Vallee must make any move toward a divorce.

"His actions have caused our separation," she insisted. "Now let him get out of this mess in his own way."

She said she was "in southern California to stay" after her 30th trip across the continent.

"I'm all tired out and I want to rest," she amplified. "Later, I may think of entering the movies."

She and Vallee were married at West Orange, N. J., in July, 1931.

SHAW POLISHES UP HIS SPEECH FOR TONIGHT

Expects 'To Talk His Way Out' If He's Arrested

On Board S. S. Empress of Britain, April 11 (INS)—George Bernard Shaw expressed the hope today that "New York will not have an inferiority complex" because of his arrival.

Shaw had none such. "If I get arrested I expect to talk my way out of jail," he said whimsically.

The Empress of Britain was due to dock in New York before noon today. Shaw spent his final hours on board polishing up the address he will make in the Metropolitan Opera House this evening. He has taken great pains with the manuscript for this talk, his first speech on American soil. He humorously suggested that this would be something for America "to remember him by."

Asked what he had given the world to remember him by, Shaw replied that he was a "professional earthquaker."

ANYTHING FOR MONEY

"I am in the earthquake business," he said. "It is utter truism which causes a moral earthquake. But the world soon settles back almost into its original state of Communism or Fascism with rival methods for rebuilding following minor tremors.

"But sooner or later America will take up the matter and go further into it than Russia. In even the American revolution, property owners will hire racketeers to fight for them. There are always enough Americans who will do anything for money. The early United States' public opinion against any man living on his own property has changed now."

The bearded bard took occasion to shoot one of his shafts at the American Congress.

"Congress does nothing but talk, and prevents other people from talking," he said.

STAND THIS ON HEADS

He admitting that he does considerable talking himself, but asserted many people had a wrong conception of him.

"People say I talk while standing on my head, when actually I stand other people on their heads," he chuckled.

Shaw also admitted that time and events had compelled him to revise some of his earlier ideas. He said that his youthful theory of putting socialism into practice through the parliamentary system of government had been proven wrong, pointing out that a number of socialistic laws had turned out to be bad conservatives. He cited J. Ramsay acDonald, prime minister of England, as a case in point.

He declared, however, that he had believed in communism long before Lenin and Trotzky overturned Russia, and said he had gone further than Lenin in communism.

POPE ATTENDS LAST SERVICE

Vatican City, April 11 (INS)—Screened from a distinguished congregation gathered in the throne room of the papal palace, Pope Pius XI today listened to his last Lenten sermon of the year.

It was the seventh, the previous six having been delivered each Friday during Lent. The final sermon always is preached on Tuesday so it will not conflict with the Good Friday ceremonies at the end of the week.

The Pontiff is not seen by the congregation of notables for these sermons, although they are plainly visible to him. The sermons, always delivered before the Pope by one of the order of Capuchin monks, is preached from a pulpit placed beneath the throne of the throne room.

Fr. Vittorio de Sestri Ponente is the ecclesiastic always chosen to preach before Pope Pius.

43 Witnesses Called in Probe of 'King' Solomon Slaying

Forty-three witnesses, including the five Negro "guests" of the city, were summoned before the Suffolk County grand jury today to tell about the slaying of Charlie (King) Solomon, racket chief.

The Negroes were employes of the Coiton Club, in which Solomon was a guest when six men forced him into an anteroom to deal out death.

Only one of the alleged six has been apprehended, John T. O'Donnell of South Boston, who surrendered at police headquarters a few days after the killing in January.

The others sought are Frank Karlonas of South Boston, James P. Scully of South End, James P. (Skeets) Coyne of Dorchester, John Burke of Charlestown and John J. Moore of Brookline.

Presentation of the case to the grand jury I expected to end the "happy landing" made by the five Negroes on the eighth floor of Hotel Statler for protection of police against those who might do harm. They are "Al" Brantley, Cotton Club master of ceremonies, and James Lewis, Maurice Johnson, Robert Hamlet and Ezmas Dorsey, a colored quartet.

Asst. Dist.-Atty. Daniel J. Gillen was selected by Dist.-Atty. William J. Foley for presentation of the Solomon case to the grand jury. Among those summoned as witnesses are Capt. Stephen J. Flaherty and Serg. William J. McCarthy of the Roxbury Crossing station; Inspector John F. McCarthy and Harry M. Pieters of the police homicide squad.

DIVIDENDS IN FEDERAL SLOW

Failure of stockholders to pay stock assessments was blamed today for failure of the closed Federal National Bank to pay a second dividend.

Less than $275,000 of an assessment that aggregated $2,000,000 has been collected from the stockholders, it was learned.

In addition to the shortage on that score, more than $15,000,000 in money owed to the bank is still uncollected and little prospects are in sight for collection of any substantial part of it.

Herbert Pearson, federal receiver for the bank, declined to discuss the financial condition at the present time but announced that he expected to issue a statement on its financial condition by Thursday.

He has been authorized by federal court to compromise the bank's claim on five notes that total $32,000 against the Korn Leather Co., of Peabody, and notes against Max Korn, the endorser, totalling $12,000.

Since the closing of the bank 16 months ago only one dividend has been paid depositors, that one in the amount of 10 per cent of their deposits.

HECTIC BATTLE ON 5-DAY WEEK

Washington, April 11 (INS)—The battle over the five-day week, 30-hour bill was fast developing into a legislative struggle of titanic proportions today as Congress was bombarded with letters and telegrams for and against the legislation.

Manufacturers from every section of the country were pouring in protests to House members, while labor organizations were demanding approval of the measure.

The passage of the Black Bill by the Senate came as a shock to many opponents of the legislation, who refused to take the legislative battle seriously.

With only the administration restraining the House from immediate action ,the situation has assumed a totally different aspect.

The House labor committee, confident the administration will approve the measure, today called Secretary of Labor Perkins into a secret session to discuss modification of the bill.

COURT TO ACT ON STRIKE PLAN

While ranks of Lowell shoe strikers swelled over the 3000 mark, A. C. Lawrence Co. of Peabody today planned to block a strike at its leather plant by court injunction against union organizers.

Employes of the company have not yet declared a strike but some talk of one among members of the National Shoe and Leather Workers' Union caused the officials to make the move, they said.

In Lowell, Mayor Slowey formulated plans today for a possible settlement of the difficulties in his city by tomorrow. He has called a meeting of a citizens' committee and a conference of strikers and manufacturers' representatives. Strikers also planned a mass meeting.

WINTER WHEAT CROP IS SHORT

Washington, April 11 (AP)—With Congress bogged down in debate over how to reduce agricultural surpluses, nature has taken a hand in solving the fram over-production problem.

Alternate freezes and thaws have cut winter wheat and rye harvest expectations to the lowest point in years.

The agriculture department yesterday estimated the April 1 condition of winter wheat at 50.4 per cent of normal and forecast the smallest crip since 1904. It figured this year's crop at 334,987,000 bushels compared with 462,151,000 last year; 787,393,000 bushels in 1931, and average production of 589,000,000 over the fiveyears, 1924 to 1928.

Farmers' intentions to plant spring wheat inst month showed a reduction from last years' acreage, but this may be sharply revised in later reports. From some winter wheat sections came reports today that the winter crop has been abandoned, the soil reworked, and preparations laid for replanting it to spring varieties.

RUTH JUDD TO PUSH APPEAL

Phoenix, Ariz., April 11 (US)—Attorneys for Winnie Ruth Judd today were apparently prepared to appeal to the State Supreme Court following refusal of Superior Judge Howard Speakman to hear a motion that the death penalty be set aside and that a new hearing be accorded the double trunk slayer.

Judge Speakman based his decision on the grounds that he was without jurisdiction to act, and said Mrs. Judd should appeal to the State Supreme Court for redress. Her attorneys said they probably would follow this advice.

Mrs. Judd is under sentence to hank Friday, April 21, for the murder of Miss Agnes Anne Leroi. She was never tried for the murder of Hedvig Samuelson, her other victim.

Before Judge Speakman denied the motion for a new trial, a bitter personal clash developed between the Judge and Chief Counsel O. V. Willson. The judge accused Willson of implying that Mrs. Judd had not been given a fair trial in his court and that he was prejudiced.

Rafter to Fight for Right to Examine Costello Organs

Atty. Francis E. Rafter of Salem, counsel for Mrs. Jessie B. Costello of Peabody, accused murderess today, was in New York for a conference with medical experts.

He expects a court order Thursday that will enable him to turn over the vital organs of Fire Capt. William J. Costello to Dr. Alex andre O. Gettler of Bellevue Hospital, New York, and Dr. Francis P. McCarthy of Boston.

Atty. Rafter was balked in his attempts to force by court order and information concerning the examination of the organs by state experts. He won only one of several points, that one being a statement of prosecutor Hoyt they will claim cyanide of potassium was the poison that brought death to Capt. Costello.

The other information he sought concerned the exact quantity of poison and the exact location at which it was found in the organs.

"We feel the defense is entitled to information about the amount of poison used, in which organs it was found, and other medical data in order that we may prepare an adequate defence," Atty. Rafter said in his plea.

Asst. Dist.-Atty. John J. Ryan, opposing the motions for Dist.-Atty. Hugh A. Cregg, told the court there was "sufficient poison to cause death," but declined the other information on the grounds that it concerned important evidence of the prosecution. He was then ordered to name the poison and announced it as cyanide.

COUPLE SOUGHT IN FATAL AUTO CHASE

Search for a Dedham man and his married woman parking companion was opened by state detectives today as funeral services were conducted in Sacred Heart Church, Roslindale for Alfred Brymer, 20, victim of Dedham police bullets.

Brymer went to his death and two companions were arrested after the parked couple reported an attempted holdup and Dedham police chased the stolen car of the youths for nearly five miles.

"I want to talk with the man who, on Saturday night telephoned to Dedham police and said he was held up while he was parked in Gay st., Dedham, with a woman," State Detective Michael F. Fleming said today.

Fleming was under instructions of Asst. Dist. Atty. Edmund R. Dewing to turn in a complete report of the investigation by tomorrow night.

Further Sweat Shop Action Refused by Senate

By a vote of 22 to 14, the Senate refused to substitute a bill, for an adverse committee report, to further penalize sweat shops.

The bill would have made mandatory the tagging of all goods manufactured in violation of wage decrees made by the minimum wage commission.

Senator William S. Conroy of Fall River denounced the men engaged in sweat shop business, characterizing them as "bloodsuckers." He charged that in many cities of the state, including Boston girls were getting as low a $1 a week for 48 hours labor.

Senator William S. Madden of Boston, backing up Conroy declared that this class of manufacturers should be driven from the state.

The only Democratic senator to vote against this protection for women and girls was Senator Joseph A. Langone of the North End. Langone claimed that nothing was being done for the pick and shovel workers and for that reason was against the bill.

INSANITY PLEA IN KIDNAPING

Skeele of the college of music o fthe University of Southern California. She will go to trial today on her plea that she was not guilty of insanity.

Miss Hammer, who frequently interrupted the trial by laughter and wild gestures, received the verdict with a grin.

A. H. Van Dorn, who went to trial with Miss Hammer but pleaded guilty last week, was sentenced by Superior Judge William T. Aggeler to a 10-year to life term.

If the jury finds Miss Hammer insane she will escape prison punishment. Otherwise the law provides she also be sentenced to serve from 10 years to life.

ICE FISHERMEN ADRIFT IN BAY

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., April 11 (INS) — Coast guardsmen today were attempting to rescue three fishermen who spent the night drifting helplessly on two separate ice floes in storm-swept Whitefish Bay, Lake Superior.

The marooner men, Charles and Allis Baker and Harold Beach, were last seen five miles from shore, drifting northwestward into the open bay before a strong southeast wind.

Coast guardsmen planned to ask the assistance of three airplanes belonging to the Canadian forestry service if they are unable to drive their surf boats through rifts in the ice floe. The planes are equipped with pontoons.

The three men were fishing with four others when the ice broke, carrying them from the mainland. Four of the fishermen leaped across the gap to safety.

ANTI-NARCOTIC PACT TO STOP DOPE TRADE

By KENNETH CLARK

Washington, April 11—The world's most smashing blow at the dope evil was taken last night when ratification of the Geneva anti-narcotics convention was completed.

The State Department announced the international convention for limitation of narcotics manufacture had been ratified by the required number of nations and would go into effect July 10.

The manufacture of narcotics is limited to the world's actual medical and scientific needs. Strict control of distribution is imposed, and the signatories pledge unceasing war against dope traffickers.

The treaty will stop the flow of tons of dope which have been inundating American shores from abroad.

The State Department said:

"The advantage of the treaty to the United States lies in the fact it will limit the quantities of dangerous narcotics manufactured in other countries, will render much stricter the control abroad of the legitimate trade, and will afford better facilities for suppressing the illicit traffic."

Twenty-nine countries have ratified, although only 25 were needed to make the treaty effective. All important nations are expected ultimately to ratify. The nations which have ratified or acceded to the treaty are:

United States, France, Germany, Great Britain, Turkey, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Cuba, India, Italy, Mexico, Monaco, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Uruguay, Belgium, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Lithuania, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Persia, Peru, Sudan, Salvador and Hungary.

The United States was the first nation to ratify. In fact, and two hard-hitting young Americans were largely responsible for the treaty.

WARREN BLOCKS FILM PROBE

Washington, April 11 (US)—Action on a resolution by Rep. Sirovich (D), of New York, calling for investigation of the movie industry, was blocked temporarily in the House yesterday, by Rep. Warren (D), of North Carolina.

When Rep Sabath (D), of Illinois, asked for unanimous consent to take up the resolution, favorably reported by the rules committee, Warren objected.

Sabath will call up the resolution later, under a procedure not requiring unanimous consent.

Gov. Ely Proclaims Humane Week

Sunday, April 23, has been designated as Humane Sunday by Gov. Ely in a proclamation in which he emphasizes the duty of all to dumb animals and urges religious leaders to call attention to the cause.

The governor's proclamation points out that Massachusetts has always been a pioneer and leader in providing legislation to protect animals. Today, he declared, the State's laws are considered as models and are often copies by other states.

The observance of the day here will climax the nation-wide celebration of "Be Kind to Animals Week" from April 17 to 23.

Schoolboy Fight Ends Fatally

Swansea, April 11—Investigation was being made here today into the death of Stanley Misichawski, 11, of Bark st., which proved to be the tragic aftermath of a fight between the boy and two of his playmates.

The boys were returning from school when the fight started. The Misichawski boy suddenly collapsed and died before medical aid could be summoned.

House Adopts Shift in Repeal Plans

A House amendment to the bill for a state convention to pass on repeal of the prohibitio.. acts calls for only five delegates-at-large instead of the proposed three from each of the 15 congressional districts.

Rep. Arthur V. Sullivan, of Boston, who offered the amendment which was passed on a rising vote, 1 to 42, declared the attitude of the state-at-large was the important question.

FLIER KILLED ON TEST HOP

East Hampton, Ct., April 11 (AP)—Spinning down out of the sky after having attained an altitude estimated at 25,000 feet, Lieut. Harold W. Fairchild, 24, test pilot of the United Aircraft and Transport Corporation of East Hartford, was killed here when his pursuit plane, powered with an experimental motor, crashed here in a wooded ravine.

Eye witnesses, who first spotted the plane at about 2000 feet, said it spun into the woods apparently out of control. The motor stopped at about 500 feet, indicating that the pilot cut the switch just before the plane struck the ground.

Flyers expressed the belief that Lieut. Fairchild lost consciousness in the rarefied atmosphere about six miles high when his oxygen supply became exhausted. He was making a high altitude test at the time.

For more than two hours, searching parties combed the hills in an effort to locate the plane, and were finally led to the spot by an airplane circling overhead. Lieut. Fairchild's skull and body were crushed.

DROP IN REALTY VALUES BARED

Newport, R. I., April 11 (AP)—The fall in real estate values in Newport's exclusive summer colony was disclosed in detail and in some instances officially for the first time in superior court here as the suit of Robert Goelet against the city for abatement of taxes was opened.

Goelet is suing to recover $5518 which he paid in protest last year as part of a $14,152 tax on his villa, Ochre Court. The villa was assessed at $529,700.

A real estate operator testified Ochre Court would not bring more than $300,000 on the present market. It was erected many years ago at a cost of more than a million dollars by Goelet's father, Ogden Goelet.

In support of Goelet's contention, testimony was offered to show the famous marble palace of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, which cost millions, was sold to Frederick Prince last year for $100,000.

Freighters Run High

Washington, April 11 (AP)—Freighting and fishing are listed by the commerce department as using the largest number of the 25,156 documented merchant vessels in the United States merchant marine during the last fiscal year.

Co-Eds Strong for Beer—That Is—If It Isn't Fattening

Co-eds drink beer? Well, why not is the answer that Boston University coeds have to that question.

There is no reason why they should not drink it, they contend, and seven Congress has said that it is non intoxicating. It is not a question of morals, which will determine whether or not they should drink it, but rather whether or not they should risk getting fat by partaking of the beverage.

"Why there should be any difference between men and women drinking beer, is not clear to me," says Lois Alexander, of New Jersey, coed at the university. "There should be no stigma attached to any girl who does drink it. Doctors and psychologists have declared that women will suffer no ill effects from drinking beer."

If the Boston University students are to have a private beer garden as was plaed a while ago, the girls assure you that they will be steady customers.

Jury Impaneled for Murder Trial

New Bedford, April 11 (AP)—A jury was impaneled here to try Louis Gwindowski of Central Falls, R. I., for the murder last May at Seekonk of John Russeloveitch.

Frank Dumbowski of Fall River, a co-defendant, will testify for the state.

BEATS MOTHER; ENDS LIFE

Lawrence, April 11 — Giacomo Savio, 52, was dead and his 77-year-old mother, Mrs. Jennie Savio, was dying at General Hospital today as the result of an argument between the mother and son over money.

Savio, who served eight years of a 20-year sentence in New York for slaying his father-in-law, died from a self-inflicted bullet wound he fired after beating his mother with a hammer, police said.

Mother and son were taken to the hospital in the same ambulance, the son dead at the time and the mother unconscious. Early today, doctors reported, life was slowly ebbing from the aged woman.

Innocent Man Held as Bandit to Get Freedom Today

Police in municipal court today will ask for the release of Walter A. Hickey, 28, of Stevens st., Malden, who is being held in $1000 for armed robbery of Harry Goldberg, milk wagon driver, early April 2.

For the second time within a few weeks police found they had arrested an innocent man and held him on the identification of a witness. Confession of the crime, according to police, was made by four men, arrested by Lynn police Saturday, for the holdup of a Lynn restaurant, and the theft of a police officer's gun there.

One of the four bears a close resemblance to Hickey. He is Harry Ferguson, of Clyde st., Somerville. The other three are William H. Coyne of Calumet st., Revere; Howard Seehendorf of Porter st., Somerville, and Lawrence L. Darling of North Shore rd., Revere.

B. U. OFFICIALS UNRUFFLED BY PACIFIST MOVE

Revelation that petitions were being circulated among students of the Boston University School of Theology pledging the signers against engaging in armed warfare for the United States is not causing undue anxiety on the part of university officials.

President Daniel L. Marsh made it clear that he was perfectly willing that anyone in the school might sign the petition if he so desired. He said he would make no attempt to halt the circulation.

PETITIONS TO GO ON

Dean Albert C. Knudson of the Theology School expressed similar reaction to the petition.

According to reports more than 150 of the 300 Theology School students have signed the pledges. In addition it is understood a pacifist movement to enroll thousands in the cause is under way.

There are reported to be two petitions circulating. The more radical one declares its signers will never bear arms for the United States. The other states the opposition of the signers to bearing arms and declares they will do so only in the case of armed invasion of the country.

STUDENT MINISTERS ACTIVE

Edgar F. Singer and Glenn W. Trimble are active in circulating the petitions. It is reported that plans are being completed for circulating the petitions through other branches of the University.

All signers of the petition thus far are student clergymen. Many of them preach at times in various churches in New England.

LEVIATHAN TO STAY ON RUN

New York, April 11 (AP)—The Leviathan, flagship of the American Merchant Marine, will resume transatlantic operations on April 25, it was announced, indicating that the United States Shipping Board will not take back the liner at this time.

Kermit Roosevelt and John M. Franklin, vice-presidents of the Roosevelt Steamship Co., general agent of the United States lines recently asked the Shipping Board to take back the vessel, saying it was outmoded and its continued operation entailed a financial loss.

The Leviathan has been in port since March 24.

Taking Down Dictation

—By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER—

Looks like the latest thing in careers is to be a dictator. It's nice work if you can get it.

Nobody is sure whether this kind of job was started by Mussolini or Will Hayes.

Judge Landis grabbed a lower berth in the National and an upper in the American League. The judge has full power. He can do anything he wants provided he stays away from the baseball parks.

Now Police Commissioner Mulrooney is to be beer dictator in New York. His first order should be:

"Stop drinking it for awhile, boys, and give it a chance to age."

In the old days the consumer tried to catch up to the brewery; now the ultimate brewer is seeking to catch up to the thirsty old consumer.

The froth on the top amounted to ten million dollars in various state and national taxes. Well, let Mr. Mulrooney start his dictating. We don't know shorthand and we can't spell. But we think we will get the general idea down.

In the middle, Miss Catherine Coughlan of Maynard, in an informal evening frock of plaid mousseline with plain mousseline ruffles about the throat and shoulders. Right, Miss Lillian Millmore of Watertown, in a simple black crepe evening frock with ruffles mousseline forming the sleeves. The top ruffle is appliqued in an interesting manner.

GUARDS PATROL STRIKE ZONE

Montpelier, Vt., April 11—Quiet prevailed in the granite belt today after hours of demonstrations yesterday which caused injuries to ten persons. Guards were on duty at all plants.

Two pickets and one employe of the Wetmore & Morse quarry suffered minor hurts in the demonstrations. More than 2000 workers have been away from their jobs in protest against proposed wage cuts.

The Wetmore & Morse and E. L. Smith quarries operated yesterday but the men at work left before the regular closing hour and no trouble resulted. The same procedure was followed at other plants.

Officer Injured in Making Arrest

The second North End policeman in two days today was suffering injuries received in making arrests of drunken men in that section.

He is Patrolman John L. Johnson, whose kneecap was fractured in a scuffle at the time he arrested James Harrigan of Glenwood ave., Winchester, and Thomas Conboy of Beacon st., Woburn, in Haymarket sq. Several hours after Michael Connolly of Swanton st., Winchester, was arrested at his home on a charge that he tripped Johnston.

Waterfront Veterans Mourn Death of Capt. O'Donnell

Waterfront veterans today mourned the death of Capt. Eugene E. O'Donnell, president of the Eastern Steamship Lines, Inc., while his family at 274 Beacon st., Back Bay, prepared for funeral services tomorrow.

Capt. O'Donnell died at Cardinal O'Connell House, St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Brighton, following an operation for ruptured appendix. Burial will follow a solemn high mass of requiem at 11 a. m. tomorrow in St. Cecelia's Church, Back Bay.

His life at sea was inspired by the fish business his father conducted many years ago at T wharf. At the age of 16 the man who was to rise to power in shipping circles took his first job as a deckhand on a tug.

Later he joined the crew of the coastwise freighter Parthian, that sailed between Boston and Philadelphia. His career led through the various grades, and five years ago he was appointed to succeed Calvin Austin as president of the Eastern Steamship Lines, Inc.

Capt. O'Donnell is survived by Mrs. O'Donnell, the former Anna F. Harvey of Hartford, Conn., to whom he was wed in 1913. Miss Ellen O'Donnell, daughter of the couple, recently made her debut at a fashionable party aboard the steamer St. John, one of the Eastern fleet.

BOUNDARY WAR NEARS FINISH

Washington, April 11 (AP)—Atty.-Gen. Lawrence C. Jones of Vermont filed in the Supreme Court here, a brief for use when the boundary dispute between New Hampshire is reached for oral argument. On the brief as one of the counsel for Vermont appears the name of United States Sen. Warren R. Austin, of that state.

The brief contained 154 printed pages, and discussed in detail the various questions at issue, affecting the boundary. It urged the court to adopt the recommendations of Special Master Edmund F. Travus of Louisville, Ky., which would have the boundary placed at low water mark on the west side of the Connecticut river.

Atty.-Gen. Jones summarized his argument in support of the findings of the special master by declaring the evidence fully supported his conclusion, and that by retaining all land west of the Connecticut river Vermont would be protected from the exercise by New Hampshire of any jurisdiction over land to which Vermont is entitled.

GANDHI KIN ON ANIMAL SHIP

None other than a cousin of Mahatma Gandhi paid Boston a visit today—as guardian to 54 crates of tigers, lions, snakes and other wild life.

He was not in dress of his more famous cousin, however, when the steamer City of Roubaix steamed up from quarantine to dock at East Boston.

The animals, including 1000 monkeys and hundreds of strange birds, elk, deer, leopards and what not are destined for the animal farm of John Benson at Nashua, N. H.

The City of Roubaix made the trip from Calcutta in less than 37 days, a trip that usually requires 40 or more. She carried 500 tons of general cargo for Boston in addition to the animals.

Suicide on Threshold of Mausoleum

New Bedford, Mass., April 11 (AP)—The body of Herman L. Grumbi, 70, New Bedford business man, was found across the threshhold of a mausoleum he had built several years agoin a local cemetery at a cost of $50,000. A shotgun was beside the body and a medical examiner said it was suicide.

Grumbi apparently had opened the door to the tomb, which he will be the first to occupy, and fired a shot into his head. Discouragement over ill health was advanced as the motive.

French Version of Onion Soup

George Rector Gives His Recipe

Recently I had an interesting chat with George Rector, culinary king, regarding his famous recipe for onion soup in the French manner.

"To the French go the soup honors. And the secret lurks in the pot-au-feu, as the French stubbornly insist upon calling a plain ordinary soup pot on the fire. Into this pot, which simmers on the back of the stove, goes every left-over bit of food from which juices can be boiled, yielding a bountiful supply of soup stock such as money cannot buy.

"I had occasion at 5 o'clock one morning to visit the famous market place of Paris. Inside and outside the market vendors were selling onion soup—a gastronomical delight to be sure! Since then onion soup has been my choice in soups.

"This soup cannot be prepared successfully unless you have good strong soup stock, but canned bouillon, or consommé, bouillon cubes or extract of beef may be substituted.

"Here is my recipe for onion soup au gratin:

ONION SOUP AU GRATIN
4 large onions
4 tbsps. butter
6 cups beef broth or canned consomme
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
Salt and pepper
French bread or rolls
Grated Parmesan cheese

"Peel the onions and slice them thin. Heat the butter in a frying pan and cook the onions in it until they are browned and tender. Cook slowly so that the onions will not burn. Add the broth or consomme and season with the Worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper. Simmer, for 1 minute. Toast slices of French bread or split rolls. Turn the soup into an arthenware marmite or into a casserole, cover with the toast and sprinkle with grated cheese. Place under the broiler flame to melt and brown the cheese."

Beef Stew for Your Supper

We had roast beef for the Last Sunday dinner. And when supper time rolled 'round there was the weekly problem of what to serve to tempt the after-grippe appetite of friend husband. Beef stew with a big platter of thin toast, is his special weakness. But it did seem a crime to cut up the remnants of a delicious rump roast—especially when there was a can of ready-to-heat-and-eat beef stew beckoning me from the emergency shelf. (In spite of the fact that said husband is not pre-disposed in favor of canned eats.)

Anyway, I heated it up, adding a dash of magic seasoning and a soupcon of onion salt and celery salt, 1 cup hot water and 1 tsp. cooking sherry. We let it simmer on the back of the range for 15 or 20 minutes and then poured it into our best silver-covered dish and presented it with due ceremony.

"Well!" said he, reaching for his third helping. "That roast beef tastes even better in this stew than it did at dinner!"

MARTHA LEE.

HERE'S A JELLY ROLL THAT'S FAILURE-PROOF

We've just received a very grateful letter from a lady from Milton, who writes that she had never been able to make a successful jelly roll until she tried the recipe published in the Martha Lee Cook Book, issued March 19th, with the Boston Sunday Advertiser. She says:

"My husband is very fond of jelly roll and I've tried time and again to make a good one that would not break, and yet would taste good, but gave it up for a bad job. But this morning I really made a perfect jelly roll, thanks to this simple, delicious recipe."—

The recipe was one sent in by a member of the Martha Lee Cooking School, Mrs. Ina Potter, of 21 Carmel st., Chelsea, and is truly failure-proof. Here it is:—

Beat the yolks of 2 eggs until very light. Add 3 tbsps. sugar and beat again till well mixed. Sift 3 tbsps. flour and ¼ tsp. baking powder and add to egg mixture. Fold in the beaten whites of 3 eggs. Pour batter into a pan about 10x13 inches. Bake at 350 deg. F. for 8 to 10 minutes. Remove from oven and turn cake onto a paper. Spread with jelly (about 1 glass), and roll up. Sprinkle outside with powdered sugar.

"SO HAPPY THAT I TRIED ALL-BRAN"

Delicious Cereal Brought Relief From Constipation

If you have headaches, loss of appetite and energy, sleeplessness or any other of the frequent effects of constipation, read Mrs. Schneider's letter:

"Since I have been eating Kellogg's ALL-BRAN, I don't have to take anything else for constipation. How good it is, and how much better it is for constipation than pills or any other medicine.

"I would never go back to what I used to take, because Kellogg's ALL-BRAN is wholesome and healthful."—Mrs. John Schneider, 950 Tenth Street, Oshkosh, Wisconsin.

Constipation is usually due to lack of "bulk" to exercise the intestines, and vitamin B to help tone the intestinal tract. ALL-BRAN has both, as well as iron for the blood.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that of lettuce. Within the body, it forms a soft mass. Gently, it clears out the wastes.

Try ALL-BRAN in place of pills and drugs—so often habit-forming. Two tablespoonfuls daily will overcome most types of constipation. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Use as a cereal, or in cooking. Recipes on the red-and-green package. At all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

BOOKS—And a Number of Things

By Charles Hanson Towne

A young man in Massachusetts, who tells me that he has a great ambition to be a worthwhile writer, is feeling his way to the larger magazines by writing at present for the pulps. These lesser periodicals, he rightly says, have been the training ground of many successful writers, and, realizing his own limitations, they seem to be the best route for reaching others of a more exalted reputation.

But he goes on to say that he cannot get any encouragement from editors. True, they accept his stories, and send him checks—small ones, no doubt, but still checks. These are most delightful to receive, but far more would he rather have a word of praise now and then. Lately he has engaged a literary agent. When a sale is made, all he reads is:

"Glad to say we have sold your latest story. Herewith our check, etc"

Do editors no longer write encouraging letters? he wishes to know. Or do they save them for genius? He understands that competition these days is terrific, and he knows that he is no genius; but there must be some reason why he has been able to break into six different fiction markets during the past year. Certainly all his stories, he feels, were not purchased simply because the editor had a spot for them. Some of them must have been reasonably well done. But how is he to know this? Was a certain tale bought for its clever twist at the end; was this detective yarn bought because it contained great originality, and was another sold because of good characterization?

He gets letter of brief criticism with his rejections, but no word comes at all with an acceptance.

He knows from what he has read that editors used to hand out some encouragement. Mr. Hoffman, of Adventure, did this; Bob Davis was noted for his help; so was Maclean of Popular. But now no editor seems to have the time or the inclination to send him a word of praise.

* * *

There is hope for this young man; for he is not penuriously interested only in the payment he receives for his work. The artist longs for a word of praise, counting it as above rubies. The born hack writer will be satisfied with checks, and crave no other evidence of success.

Think of the writers who are not receiving even that amount of encouragement!

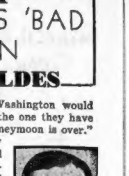
PRESIDENT FACES 'BAD PRESS' SOON

By GILBERT SELDES



Gilbert Seldes

I wish the special correspondents in Washington would think up a new phrase to take the place of the one they have been using steadily for three weeks: "The honeymoon is over." "The honeymoon" represents the first few days of Mr. Roosevelt's administration and Mr. Anderson of The Nation and the mysterious T. R. B. of The New Republic would be the first to tell you that it was a strange honeymoon. Mr. Roosevelt being peculiarly indifferent to the bride, which was Congress, and Congress full of murmurs and resentments against the groom, Mr. Roosevelt. As a period of sunny delight and mutual discovery, the honeymoon never existed, and all the correspondents mean now is that Congress is about ready to fight back, making the marriage legal. Or, they sometimes suggest, the other party to the wedding was not Congress, but the country, and our honeymoon with the President is drawing to an end. As we are in for a marriage lasting at least four years, perhaps this is just as well. Mr. Roosevelt is approaching criticism—what the English call a "bad press"—and one of the reasons is that for all his friendliness to the correspondents in Washington, he has not manipulated public opinion. So far he has not needed to. But he is approaching, also, the serious problems of his administration, not the emergencies he inherited. He has still to push back the depression and to adjust our foreign affairs. Among other things, he needs a press-agent.

Things to Say

A good press-agent could suggest, for the President, that the Constitution of the United States has not been overthrown and that Congress has, without display of force, more or less willingly abandoned certain habits and powers to the executive branch. I doubt whether Mr. Roosevelt actually enjoys being called a dictator, in these days when the world has slipped from memories of Stalin and Mussolini to a definite connection with Hitler. I doubt whether he cares to have his plans for recovery called socialistic, even if they are. A good press-agent, preferably himself, could make these things clear and set them in an attractive light.

Among other things, Mr. Roosevelt, explaining himself, might warn us that this is not a one-man depression and that he alone cannot pull us out of it. This will anticipate disappointment on the part of those who blamed only Mr. Hoover and trust exclusively in Mr. Roosevelt, and are perfectly willing to lie back and let him, because he was so active and able on the fourth of March, carry us for a year or two. It would not be inappropriate for any President to say that a hundred and twenty-five million people have to do some of the work themselves.

After Congress Goes

By June the first (or whenever Congress adjourns) Mr. Roosevelt might survey what has been accomplished and divide his various measures into classes. In the first class would be the emergency measures; in the second, the temporary ones; in the third, those intended for something like permanence. He had on arriving in power, three things to do; check the banking panic, fight against the general depression, and reform the system under which panics and depressions occur. Closing the banks fell into the first class; reopening them under control was a temporary measure, of the second class; and a new banking system, now being evolved, comes under the third heading.

The difficulty was this: that the emergency and temporary measures ran counter to the permanent ones, sometimes being hostile to one another. Like every one else, the Administration wants a higher price level and free spending; yet the closed banks—those which are still closed—tie up money. The economy program reduces our spending money. The dollar-a-day men will hardly make up for these deficits. If these measures were all, it would appear that the new remedy for deflation is more deflation. My economist friends assure me that things do not work that way.

The Long Run

It would be encouraging to hear from the President, in terms as simple as those he used to explain the reopening of the banks, that he has a long-term plan which goes beyond the limits of any one of his emergency measures. He can properly say that the additional burden we have had to bear for these past weeks has been necessary in order to preserve our standing among the nations; he can even say that any plan for the future would have been compromised without them. Then, without making promises by dates of the calendar, he could express his purposes.

The New Republic explains Mr. Roosevelt's decisiveness in action by saying that many of the bills he proposed to Congress were ready, in writing, before he was inaugurated. The President's mind was also prepared, as you can discover in certain passages of his book, Looking Forward. But the average voter cannot go behind bills and speeches to discover intentions, not to speak of a political philosophy. It might cheer us up, since the honeymoon is over, to hear directly what these intentions are. After so many accomplishments a few promises would not frighten us.

MANY GIRLS ASK "SCHOOL OF CLOTHES" HOW THEY MAY LEARN TO ADVISE OTHERS

Nine-tenths of Perspiration and One-tenth Inspiration Equals Success

By MARGARET MATSON

HERE IS AN OPEN LETTER to all of you who have asked the "School of Clothes" how you, too, may learn to be clothes advisors. Almost every week brings letters from high school girls who feel that they have talent in this direction, from dissatisfied or unemployed business girls, and even married women in search of some new lucrative interest. To all of you we answer that, obviously, the more you can learn about clothes, the better equipped you will be.

There is a deeper and deeper feeling for ART in clothes—for the application of design and color principles to everyday choices. That means that a person who wishes to make clothes her profession should, by all means, give some time to the study of art. She need not be able to paint or draw, but she should be able to understand very thoroughly the fundamentals of design and color harmony. She should know how to manipulate lines to disguise figure irregularities, and to choose and combine colors that "do something" for the person who is to wear them. These things, as we said before, are growing more and more important in all phases of the clothes industry.

The next item which we feel is of great importance is a knowledge of sewing. Even though the particular angle chosen may not require skill of this sort, there is always need for an appreciation and understanding of good workmanship. And that is quite essential.

Perhaps the most important thing in the preparation of the clothes analyst, or whatever we might call her, should be a balance of schooling and practical experience. Either one without the other is limited. And we should advise that one make it a point to equip herself with both before she attempts to guide the decisions of others.

One little high school girl wrote, "How can a girl who has no money learn the dress business?" Perhaps many of you would like to ask the same question. There is one way and that is by getting a "job" that will keep you near clothes—perhaps a stockgirl or salesgirl in a store, or an assistant to a dressmaker, or an errand girl in a manufacturer's establishment. Anything that will bring you into close contact with the practical end of the business. Then as soon as you have earned sufficient to allow you to get some schooling, find what classes or courses there are which will help you to progress. In the meantime, study people and their clothes needs; go to all the style shows you can, and hear what is being done and said about the newer things. And keep on working.

It's Edison, I think, who said that success is made up of one-tenth inspiration and nine-tenths perspiration. Clothes is a fascinating game, but no easier than any of the others. Whether or not you succeed will depend upon how much you really want to succeed and how much you will pay for success. Good luck to you.

Building Up the Child Who Is Underweight

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

HEALTH comes first or all in importance. The child who has a good start in life has an immense advantage over one who is handicapped by the effects of ill health.

Dr. Copeland

I wish every child could be well nourished and possessed of good health. Many children go about listless, behind in their school work and burdened more than they should be by long hours of study and home work. How about your child? Does he seem tired, pale and irritable?

There is a real reason back of all this. The question of underweight centers about one of a good many contributing factors. Perhaps the first thing to consider is whether the child has any physical defect. It is well to have your doctor look him over and give his opinion on the subject.

Sometimes a child with defective eyesight or poor hearing will develop a serious physical condition. Very often a nervous, high-strung child who is behind in his school work will be found to have quite serious eye strain. If permitted to go on, mal-nutrition and underweight are liable to follow.

Where there are adenoids or diseased tonsils, poisons may be carried by the blood stream to all parts of the body. If one of these conditions exists, it should be attended to at the earliest possible moment. If the child seems to be underweight, it may be that the slight operation needed will bring him back to normal health.

It may be that your child is not getting the proper nourishment. Every child should have at least a quart of milk every day. This may be taken as a drink, or in the cooked food and with cereals. Milk should be the foundation of every child's diet, and nothing but the very best milk is good enough for your child.

A growing child should have fresh fruits and vegetables. These furnish the wonderful vitamins, minerals and other substances which promote growth and energy.

A child who is underweight must not be scolded. He should be encouraged gently, but firmly, in the right living habits. When his day has been reorganized and he has had time to build up his strength and ambition, it will be worth all the time and worry you have put into it to see him well and strong again. Then when good habits have been formed, they should be kept up diligently during all the years of growth. Matter of little or no significance.

A Model You Will Be Delighted to Make

By MARIAN MARTIN

IF YOU'VE had difficulty in finding a frock that really slenderizes your figure, you'll be delighted with the model sketched today. The pointed seamings create the illusion of a taller and slimmer silhouette for they are correctly proportioned, and the winning collar and three-quarter puffed sleeves are especially attractive on the matron. Choose twin prints or print and monotone . . . the lighter color forming the bodice above the fullest part of the bust, thus accenting the slender hipline.

Pattern 9332 may be ordered only in sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 38 requires 2¾ yards 39-inch fabric and 1¾ yards contrasting. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included with pattern.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for EACH MARIAN MARTIN pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE of each pattern ordered.

Address all orders to Boston Evening American Pattern Department, 232 West 18th Street, New York, N. Y.

PATTERN 9332

BISCUIT WITH BLACK ACCENTS

When fashionable churches give up their throngs on April 16, we predict a lavish use of fur on distinguished ladies. Here, fox has been dyed to match a biscuit-beige lacy wool coat, rimming the collar in a delightfully new manner. The ascot matches the coat, and with the outfit is worn a little shiny black straw toque with a veil and black glace kid gloves.

The Daily True Story -:- Woman of Mystery

WITH BEER ALREADY back and prohibition repeal on the way, perhaps it would be only proper for commutation of the sentence of Laura Sanders. At any rate the appeal has been placed before the governor. And the person who figures most prominently in the appeal is the man who indirectly may be held responsible for her fate—her husband.

But this is starting the story backwards. Laura has now been in her cell more than two years and during that period had plenty of time to think over those horrible days when her name and picture were blazoned across newspapers in shrieking type:

GUNMOLL HELD IN KILLING OF TROOPER!

Gungirl Tried for Murder

Bootleg Queen Escapes Chair.

Some of the papers were gentler. Instead of dubbing her as a gangster's girl, they called her a mystery woman. Throughout the case she had successfully resisted the uncovering of her true identity. She had gone down in the public eye as a tough, hard-boiled wanton of the underworld. How little they knew!

Laura had been caught—as the police say—red-handed. "Butch" Killien was driving the mazuficent car. It was loaded with precious contraband. Laura was the foil. She was the atmosphere to deceive the suspecting police.

She looked so sweet and gentle sitting there beside "Butch"—"Butch" figured he would pass the gauntlet easily.

Laura never really knew what happened during that short flashing space of a few minutes. All she really remembered was that she continued to hold that small revolver in her hand. She saw "Butch" slump beside her in the car and the autocareening unsteadily it came up against a clump of trees.

A short while later she was taken out, dazed but unhurt. The revolver was still in her hand. A trooper took it from her. Two bullets had been fired.

"Wouldn't be surprised if one of her shots got Tom," remarked one of them. Then they took her off.

An autopsy was held. Three bullets were found in Tom's body. The ballistic expert reported none who from her gun. But that didn't let her out. She was as guilty as "Butch," and since "Butch" was dead she might as well expiate the murder.

Laura had come from a fine family and had eloped with a youth below her social scale. Her parents disinherited her, believing she would thus return. But they failed to estimate her pride.

For a while the pair lived contentedly. Then the usual petty domestic quarrels began.

One day, after the breakfast table argument proved too acute, her husband failed to return.

Untrained in the usual woman's occupations, such as stenography or bookkeeping, Laura realized the most likely place for her to land was that o fa hostess. An employment agency obliged her and she was sent to a cabaret in Long Island.

She was introduced to "Butch" Killien as one of the silent owners of the night club. Of course, he looked nothing like his nickname. Just a well-dressed, suave, polished young man. He offered to drive her back to the city. She accepted—without knowing the implications—and the tragedy overtook them.

Deep in the mire, she still clung to her pride. She made up her mind not to besmirch her family or their reputation. She hoped bitterly that her husband would come to her aid. But she didn't know that he left the city and had gone to the Northwest and knew nothing of the tragedy.

Out in the north woods his temper cooled down. He began to write letters and they came back. He tried again and again—the same results.

Finally he returned, and as a last resort turned to the Missing Persons Bureau. They traced her to her prison cot.

They have since met—separated by the barbed wire. The early bitterness and foolish differences have been wiped away, and they are ready to start life anew.

All they are waiting for is for the dotted line of the Chief Executive of the state.

All names of characters in this story are fictitious.

Household Hints

IF YOUR velvet garments are beginning to show that a whole winter season is behind, your friend in need is the bath-tub. Run it full of steaming hot water and hang the garments near enough to get the benefit of the steam but not so close that they get an actual bath. Then rub a silk cloth over the material, stroking it the way of the pile. The stroking will restore the sheen and erase the "rubbed" spots.

WHEN COOKING foods that require constant stirring, place a few marbles in the pot. The boiling keeps them rolling on the bottom of the pot and prevents the substance from sticking.

IF YOUR CAKE or pastry has been thoroughly cooked without browning, turn out your fire and place the pan as though to broil it. The heat from the oven will finish the browning without further cooking.

STICK A CORK in the spout of your coffee pot and it will keep coffee hot and also keep the aroma.

Gray Hair

Best Remedy Is Made At Home

To half a pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair and makes it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Boy Did Right in Leaving, Says Miss Fairfax

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIFAX:

I made a date with my best girl for Sunday evening, and told her to be sure and stay home, so we could go out together. When I called I found that some of her near kinsfolk, who live at a distance, had motored there for a week-end visit, and her mother said she could not go out, but must stay and help to entertain them. I stayed for about half an hour, and then thought the tactful thing to do was to leave and let the family have their visit together, so I left. I have called her up several times since, but she insists that by leaving the family party I have hurt her beyond forgiveness. What should I have done?

LOUIS.

Dear Louis: In your place I should have done precisely the same thing, thinking that near relatives would have things to talk about in which a stranger would have no part. Your girl was just a little bit touchy, and I hope by this time you have made up, and everything is going smoothly.

Doesn't Know Where He's 'At'

Dear Miss Fairfax,

I met a girl and fell hard for her. All went well until two weeks ago. She told me she loved me then and I am crazy about her. We quarreled on Saturday and Sunday, but I said I was sorry and asked her to forgive and forget. Monday she went out to a roadhouse drinking and smoking with utter strangers. When I remonstrated with her she accused me of spying on her, but she was seen, and also she talked of this herself. The trouble is that I love her, but I don't know where I'm at.

DISCONSOLATE.

Dear Disconsolate: It's terribly hard on a young man to know that his best girl does the things you accuse this young lady of—going to roadhouses with strangers—but if you're not engaged to her, you really have no case at all. The girl is at liberty to come and go as she chooses, unless affection for you makes her too loyal to you to go on wild parties.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

A Perplexing Question

ONE OF the eternally perplexing questions is, Shall she ask him in? If they've just returned form a theater together, or a dance, or any other kind of evening entertainment, it's too late for a girl to invite a man to come in. The well-bred girl won't do it, the well-bred man won't expect it, and her family will be grateful.

Silver Arrangement

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Kindly inform me if the arrangement of flat silver has changed. A dear friend of mine tells me that the latest is to place the piece used first farthest in the plate. In other words, to work from the plate out.

I have always put the piece used first farthest from the plate.

If I am wrong, please correct me.

A CONSTANT AND BENEFITED READER.

You aren't wrong . . . you are thoroughly right about this. It is the definite rule that the silver is placed so that the person eating can start with the silver-piece farthest from the plate and proceed toward the plate. As we figure this out, we can see quite plainly that this is the convenient and sensible way to do.

Tipping the Porter

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

When travelling in a Pullman, what is the custom in regard to tips—should the conductor, as well as the porter, be tipped, and how much?

IN DOUBT.

We do not tip the conductor on the train, just the porter, who receives at least twenty-five cents for an over-night trip, and usually thirty cents. For special service, we would give at least fifty cents, and perhaps a dollar. The waiter in the dining-car is tipped after every meal.

HOSPITAL ROW UP TO QUINCY MAYOR

The committee investigating the controversy at Quincy City Hospital will ask Mayor Charles A. Ross to demand the resignation of certain members of the institution's board of managers, unless the difficulty is remedied within the next few days.

In the event this request fails the committee plans to call an indignation meeting of all citizens of the city to protest against certain actions of members of the board of managers.

These plans have been revealed by the Rev. William B. Nichols, pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church, who is chairman of the committee which has been investigating the situation at the hospital.

It was revealed that the committee had decided that all the trouble at the hospital was caused by the interference of an inefficient and unqualified board of managers. This interference was described as responsible for breaking down the "morale and efficiency of the institution."

The investigating committee was unable to find anything to prove that wild drinking parties had been staged at the hospital, or that officials of the institution were responsible for the lowered morale and efficiency.

When informed of the finding of the committee, Mayor Ross said he hoped to remedy conditions within a few days. He plans to meet a committee of Quincy physicians today to select officials to replace three who have resigned.

Sixteen million Jews throughout the land are today celebrating the Feast of Passover, the Jew religious "Independence Day." The feast began at sundown last night and continues for a full week. The Jew eats no bread during these days of religious observance, but use matzoth instead, because matzoth contains nothing but water and flour. In the picture above you see Sanfra Halford, 3½, eating matzoth as she sits on the lap of her aunt, Ruth Halford. They live in Wales st., Dorchester. Below you see Mrs. Harry Rosenfield of Mattapan taking home her matzoth supply for the feast days.

Passover services were also held last night in Temple Mishkan Tefila, Roxbury, and Temple Beth El, Chelsea. Members of the congregation of Temple Ohabei Shalom held their Seder services in their homes.

MOFFETT PLEA PASSED OVER

Washington, April 11 (US)—The Navy Department has denied the last official request of Admiral William A. Moffett, lost in the Akron airship disaster, that a flier be appointed to succeed him as chief of the Bureau of Naval Aeronautics.

Just before going away on the ill-fated trip of the Akron, Moffett recommended that Capt. John H. Towers, one of the navy's most experienced pilots, be appointed to succeed to the Moffett post when vacated.

Instead, the naval selection board passed over all naval flying officers and sent the names of the following three Rear Admirals to the White House from which to select Moffett's successor:

Harry E. Yarnell, Joseph M. Reeves and Henry V. Butler.

THE VOICE OF BROADWAY

By LOUIS SOBEL

Snapshots at Random!

Women lined up in front of orange juice stands guzzling beer . . . That's a laff . . . The anticipated big celebration Thursday night was a dud, but a few places were jammed with folks who wanted to see what it was all about; chiefly, the Hollywood, where your own reporter was accorded the privilege of downing the first glass of 3.2 to be drawn off the tap while thousands jeered; the Paradise, where Jimmy Durante acted as bartender; Dave's Blue Room, where the Ritz Brothers and the song-writing team of Mack Gordon and Harry Revel donned white aprons and served; Nathan Kramer's Edison Hotel Coffee Shop, where Bert Lahr blew off the first foam;

A gay night Wednesday at the new "Ha-Ha" Club, with Dan Healy and Jack White in a brother-and-sister act . . . Most of Broadway present . . . An old time favorite, Lillian Fitzgerald, presents her impersonation of Fritzi Scheff chanting "Kiss Me Again" . . . Jimmy Durante Stooges at the piano while Lou Clayton hoofs . . . James Barton sings "Annabel Lee" and Gus Edwards sighs . . . Jack Dempsey sits with his back to the entertainment, facing Joe Jacobs, Schmeling's manager, which may or may not be his own form of entertainment . . . Ramon stands in back, pondering perhaps over the fickle whims of the public, for this was once his great dream place, El Patio . . . Eddie Garr slaps on a prop schmooze and imitates Durante . . . Maxey Rosenbloom sits at the side of a beautiful girl and surveys the crowd absently . . . Harold Arlen sits with a beautiful girl and surveys the crowd dreamily . . . Bert Lahr sits with his beautiful lass and surveys the crowd glumly . . . Seymour Felix sits with beautiful Gladys Glad and Mrs. Felix and surveys his table solemnly . . .

Tuesday night, walking up Seventh ave. near 55th st., her long hair flowing wildly to the wilder breezes, Peggy Fears keeping step with Jack Harkrider . . .

Later at Dave's, where blonde Vera Milton purrs, "I Love to read you and—, you're so awfully unauthentic." . . . And still later, at the Richman Club, where head and shoulders above the dancers on the floor looms Capt. Dave White, the explorer—a huge fellow with limbs like tree trunks, but he dances gracefully as a zephyr with a little gal whose blonde head comes up to his waistline . . .

Sunday night (a week ago), watching Natalie and Congressman Loring Black in a ping-pong duel, in which truth impels me to confess that the Sobol off spring emerges victorious and the Congressman puffing, so we leave to wander into the Paradise, where it appears Arthur Tracy is being honored with one of those "honor guest nights" . . . Here Grauns introduces three little gals, the Happy Sisters, who come out on the floor in obviously home-made white frocks, a nervous trio who sing a series of songs in the accepted sister harmony fashion and do right well . . . I learn they come from Naugatuck, Ct., a suburb of my own home town.

Friday night, at Madison Sq. Garden, where some 60 of us assemble for a dress rehearsal of the circus . . . Dinner is served in the lobby — sawdust on the floor, but not a single glass of beer, although officially this is the first legal beer day . . . Irvin Cobb sits with the usual glum droop of his jowls, but around him neighbors laugh and I know Cobb must be telling funny stories . . . Ferde Grofe sits with George Clarke, the Mirror's city ed, and informs me that he and Clarke are planning a "Kentucky Derby Suite" . . . Dexter Fellows roams around aimlessly and Frank Braden busily . . . Cartoonists Winsor McCay and Nelson Harding sit at the same table and seem amicable enough, but then they're of the old school . . . The new school includes Broadway columnists, and try to get two of them to sit together in a spirit of honest camaraderie! Particularly the pal who created the style which the Bible and Shakespeare thefted from him. . . And so later into the arena where the dress rehearsal simmers down into a rehearsal of the gents who put up the trapezes and the cages . . . A high note, however, is the dampening of a group of young and old gentlemen, who stop suddenly in front of you and make passes at each other or faces at the roof and run on . . . It dawns upon us that these are the clowns in their ordinary street clothes and without makeup . . . Snapshots . . . The Album of Manhattan!

Luckies Please!

Amalfi, Italy, gem of the Bay of Naples

In every corner of the world, both here and overseas, wherever you find joy in life, 'tis always "Luckies Please"

Two things that everybody wants!

When smart folk gather along the mild and lovely Neapolitan Riviera—how natural it is to see Luckies there . . . for people the world over want a cigarette that has Character . . . and Mildness.

Lucky Strike's unique Character comes from the choicest of fine, flavorful tobaccos . . . But more than that—there's the mildness that's imparted when those tobaccos are "Toasted". For these two reasons—Character and Mildness—"Luckies Please!"

because "It's toasted"

Just Who Was It Remarked "50 Million Frenchmen Can't Be Wrong"

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

Although fifty million Frenchmen can't be wrong, that does not necessarily men that the French government can't do some funny things. In which respect it is not unlike most governments.

R. E. ROGERS

The cable informs us that the foreign minister, Joseph Paul-Boncour, has been exercising his mind trying to puzzle out ways to make us love the French. His photograph reveals M. Paul-Boncour as somewhat resembling a cross between George Washington and David Warfield as The Music Master. But that is not really relevant.

He recently published his departmental budget, which contains a supplement of 175 pages, most of which is devoted to ways and means of making us love La Belle France and her citizens. In it he demanded 33,000,000 francs, which is about $1,320,000 in our money, to spend for propaganda in our direction. And the Chamber of Deputies was so impressed by his argument that it voted him the supplies . . . just like that.

New Type for Lecture Platform

The argument is that it will take money to overcome the anti-French campaign in the United States. M. Paul-Boncour is, of course, perfectly right. It will take a good deal of money, roughly speaking the amount that France owes us. Or, for a starter, the amount of the last defaulted payment. I can think of nothing so likely to allay unfavorable comment.

As an extra argument it is suggested that "since the American feminine element has an important viewpoint" . . . you're telling US, M. Paul-Boncour? . . . it must be particularly wooed and addressed. As a corollary to that, comes the really priceless bit.

The program must contain trans-Atlantic radio broadcasts, moving pictures, articles in the press, and young, good-looking lecturers, "instead of unhealthy looking, decrepit, tired, feverish, worn-out, coughing and trembling old men buttoned into frock coats. They have to be put to bed upon their arrival, with hot water bags at their feet, and awakened just in time for their lectures, when they are rushed to the railroad station with a thousand precautions. That is why France is pictured as a tired, worn-out country."

This would be funny if it were not so vicious. It seems to me that I detect here an attack on an individual. The best known and most popular French lecturer in the United States during the past few years was the Abbe Ernest Dimnet, author of "The Art of Thinking" and "What We Live By," both published by Simon & Shuster. Now the Abbe Dimnet is an elderly man. The last time he was in Boston I had the honor of presiding at his lecture in Symphony Hall and of introducing him to an audience that knew him better than it knew me. On that occasion the Abbe had a brutal cold, one of those crippling colds that makes you want to crawl into a hole somewhere and die. With that cold he delivered one of the most charming addresses I ever heard and afterwards answered innumerable questions with a frankness, a consideration and a humor that not many men could summon up, particularly under those circumstances.

Abbe Loved From Coast to Coast

The Abbe has spoken all over the United States. His books have been read everywhere. He has been loved for himself and he has undoubtedly done a great deal to make us see that a Frenchman can be a gentleman and a human being. He has tried to explain his nation's incomprehensible policy toward us. He almost succeeded.

I can't think of any other visiting Frenchman who will fill the bill as a weary and aged person. Surely M. Paul-Boncour cannot be thinking of the plump and sleek Paul Claudel, who looks more like a prosperous wholesale grocer than the mystic Catholic poet he is. Yet if the foreign minister means what he seems to mean the ambassador is probably outlawed, too, as being too old. There can be no doubt whom M. Paul-Boncour has in mind as the ideal plenipotentiary to the American people with power to spend 33,000,000 francs charming us into good humor.

The gentleman with the straw hat or the spache cap. The gentleman with the pleasant singing voice and the infectious smile and the Will Rogers lower lip. Maurice Chevalier, no less! On him the Republic of France puts its hopes that we shall not only give up our just dues but will be willing, in addition, to loan more millions of gold dollars to fortify the Polish corridor. Naturally!

M. Paul-Boncour's statement of his case is sprinkled throughout with the kind of damfool statements which make an American despair of ever knocking a little elementary knowledge about us into any European's head. Such as:

"The American people are ignorant of their own history. They must not be expected to know French history."

"The American people go to no trouble to inform themselves. We must place before their eyes some simple truths."

That last, mind you, in the face of the undoubted fact that the American spends more money for newspapers and magazines than any other people on earth and that the publishers and editors on whom he depends spare no effort or money to bring expert opinion to the largest reading public on earth. It is probably true that the average American does not know as much as he should about France. But compare what he does know with what the average Frenchman of the same class knows about America . . . there is no comparison at all.

English Are Best Propagandists

But we shall know more hereafter. For the Quai D'Orsay is going to devote itself to "gathering European news and organizing the diffusion of this news, as judiciously as possible." I wish I could put that last in large capitals. "As judiciously as possible!" You understand what that means, don't you? It means mischief.

After all, though, I can't help having a sort of suspicion that propaganda that is so beautifully announced in advance has lost a certain amount of its potential power. Circuses, now, and grand opera and rodeos and auto races need loud and long publicity, the more the merrier. But official propagandists are a little apt to be embarrassed by such a fanfare as M. Paul-Boncour blows. The visiting lecturer, however young and handsome and full of sex appeal, ought to be able to come down the gangplank with his sleeves rolled up, his pockets turned out and his silk hat held upside down to show there are no rabbits therein.

It isn't going to help him if from his coat tails is dangling a document entitled "Propaganda Instructions from the Foreign Office: Lesson I. How to Charm American Women." It isn't going to help at all.

I can hear Downing Street snickering quietly at the Quai D'Orsay. The English are the best propagandists in the world. From 1914 to 1917 they did about as they pleased with us. But they were artists. We didn't even know what had happened until years after it was all over. French papers please copy!

POSTERS BARED NAME SHIFT IN WRESTLING

Herald Editor Denies Hostility Toward Sonnenberg in Expose

There was no hostility on the part of any executive of the Boston Herald toward Gus Sonnenberg, heavyweight wrestler, at the time the alleged "expose" articles appeared in 1929, Robert B Choate, managing editor of the Herald testified in Suffolk Superior Court where Sonnenberg's $1,000,000 suits are being heard by Judge Walsh and a jury

Choate resumed the stand today in direct examination as the first defense witness, under questioning by William H. Flaherty, chief defense counsel.

Choate said he had no feeling of animosity or hostility toward the former world's champion, and as far as he knew, no other officer on the paper entertained such feeling

POSTERS FROM WOMAN

Authority to gather the necessary information for the seven articles, in which wrestling was called a "film flam game" and a "racket," was given by him, Choate said

As a result, William A Gavin assistant managing editor, then city editor, and Charles W. Morton, Jr., the reporter who wrote the articles, made "extensive examinations" of the evidence given them by Choate, he said

The original posters of which photostatic copies have been introduced in evidence, were procured by Choate from Miss Lillian Squires. These posters purported to show that Sonnenberg met several men, under different names, during a country-wide tour in 1929 after he won the title from Ed "Strangler" Lewis.

The posters were returned to Miss Squires on June 12, the day after the publication of the first article on June 11, 1929, Choate said.

Q.—You had photostatic copies made of the posters before you returned them to Miss Squires? A.—Yes, sir.

NO ANIMOSITY

Q.—Did you hear any officer of the Boston Herald express a feeling of hostility toward Sonnenberg at or about the time of the publication of these articles? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did you have any such feeling against Mr. Sonnenberg? A.—No, sir

Q.—Did you hear of any feeling of malicousness or ill will against Mr. Sonnenberg by anyone connected with the Boston Herald about that time? A. No, sir

SOUTH BOSTON IN FIGHT ON TANK FARM

Hearing Granted for Next Monday on Protests

Aroused over the granting of permits by the Boston street commissioners for erection of four oil tanks with a capacity of 3,200,000 gallons, residents of South Boston have appealed to the state fire marshal's office and have been granted a hearing for next Monday

The permits were granted, according to a charge by the Rev Dr. Patrick J. Waters, new pastor of St. Eulalia's Church and former professor at St. John's Seminary, after his protests by letter to Mayor Curley and the street commissioners remained unanswered.

St. Eulalia's parochial school and the burned church are less than two blocks from the oil tank site, on an angle, and the church pastor declares existence of the tanks in such close prox mity constitute a menace to the school children, as well as neighbors

Henry J. Sullivan of South Boston, president of the Foley-for-Mayor Club, has secured more than 10,000 names of South Boston residents protesting granting of the permits to the White Fuel Corporation in East First st., with the school at O and East Third st

The hearing Monday at the State House before the state fire marshal will open at 10 30 a. m

Pendie's mother, Vanya, had died before Judson Hammond's election to the Presidency. Without the strong mind and sharp tongue of his wife to check him, Desmond Malloy quickly succumbed to the corrosive acids which he made himself believe were whiskey.

Vanya Malloy had contrived (God knows how) to acquire a little property in real estate. This ultimately was to come to Pendie, but her husband had the income during his brief widowerhood and on his death it was to be used, at Pendie's discretion, to help Olga Lipchinski, her mother's sister, who lived in New York.

Olga Lipchinski lacked the hard practical acumen which had contributed to her sister's modest success in life. Her husband had been killed in the war. By way of a livelihood she ran a middle-class boarding house on the East Side. She had brought up three daughters, two of whom were married, one to a hardworking young Polack farmer out on Long Island and the other to a rather weedy department store clerk out of work.

Pendie was fond of her Aunt and it had become a habit with her to visit her around New Year's Day and give her an instalment of her money together with a gift or two.

Pendie, while staying in New York with Pesie's mother, had been combining a short holiday with house hunting, for she was to be married in the Spring. Pesie had been with her over New Year's but had left early the following morning for Los Angeles. Thus it was that Pendie was a day late in paying her aunt her annual visit.

A MYSTERY MAN

On this occasion it was a very worried Aunt Olga who greeted her. Things were "sitting pretty" with herself but she had only just returned from seeing Fenya, the daughter married to "that no-account bum," meaning Art Rogers, the store clerk. Fenya had just given birth to her third baby despite the fact her husband had not done a day's work in the last two years

It was not the poverty of the Rogers' home that was upsetting her, but the exact opposite. Art Rogers had found a way to make money, but how, nobody, even his wife knew.

From a mean flat in the Bronx on which the rent was long overdue to a comfortable home of his own in the hill section of Jersey City, seemed to his mother-in-law as miraculous as a tale from "Arabian Nights." But if Art had discovered Aladdin's lamp he ran no risk of its secret being stolen by his female relations.

THE WIFE'S FEARS

The chance of cuddling a new baby added persuasion to the plea of Fenya's mother that Pendie visit her cousin and try to solve the mystery surrounding her husband's spectacular rise.

With the Lindsey limousine at her disposal, Pendie was driven under the Hudson River to Jersey City where after considerable searching she found the Rogers house.

Instead of the mansion described by overwrought Aunt Olga, it turned out to be a plain wooden bungalow, newly painted and standing in what in summer promised to be a pleasant garden.

It was already dusk when she stepped out of the car. With her consent the chauffeur drove off to get some gasoline, after promising to be back in half an hour.

Pendie found Fenya and her baby in their bedroom. Fenya was not yet well enough to be out of bed. Some sort of hired help had just departed. Art was expected any moment.

For the first five minutes the new baby monopolized the conversation. The other children

STOCK LOSSES HIGH COURT IS INFORMED

Friends Mulcted in Deals Refuse to Prosecute Broker

State prison at Charlestown added a Harvard graduate to its cross section of life today.

For a term of 4 to 5 years—during which his baby daughter must believe he is in a hospital—Kenneth Kerr Donley of Wales will atone for a fraud, he admitted amounted to $376,000, from friends.

MINIMUM SENTENCE

Donley was sentenced the minimum on one of the three counts after 50 victims of his fake investment scheme refused to prosecute and only 15 of those would even furnish information. He pleaded guilty to all charges and announced that prison would be a relief from the sleepless nights of the past year and a half.

Donley walked into Middlesex court a week ago, three hours after he learned he had been indicted He announced to Dist.-Atty. Warren L. Bishop that he was ready to take his "medicine."

The story he told was startling, but Judge Walter L. Collins continued the case at that time so that authorities could check and give a connected story for the purpose of determining sentence

They learned, Asst. Dist.-Atty. Frank G. Volpe told the court, that Donley took the money of friends to put through deals whereby he was supposed to gain control of companies which he later turned over to New York interests at a handsome profit.

STOCK LOSSES HIGH

Instead of using the money in such deals Donley invested in the stock market and lost, Volpe continued, some of his investors were paid back, so that at the present Donley had but $129,000 outstanding against him

Only three of the 50 or more friends wished to prosecute, fifteen agreed to tell their story to Volpe but none of these wanted to appear before the grand jury against the man who mulcted them.

The statements of Volpe and the plea of Donley's counsel won favorable comment from Judge Collins.

"I shall in his case, however, as a state prison sentence but I do not think the ends of justice demand that he be sent to prison for so long that he will be an old, decrepit, broken man when he comes out," Judge Collins said.

"I will impose a four to five-year sentence which will restore him to society after a period of years, still able to be a useful member of the community."

STATE TO ACT ON RACE BETTING

A bill providing for a state-wide referendum on the pari-mutuel race track betting bill has been submitted in the House of Representatives here on recommendation of the House ways and means committee.

The referendum would be taken at the state election in 1934 or at any special election held before that date.

This provision brings the possibility that the referendum might be submitted to the voters at the special election, which is expected to be held in May, for the election of delegates to a constitutional convention to consider repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment

SWINDLE HEAD TO SURRENDER

A Washington man, now under secret indictment in Middlesex County as the ringleader of the Durkee investment proposition to recover a claim of $64,000,000 from the government, an alleged swindle, is expected to surrender here Thursday.

Dist. Atty Warren L. Bishop, who is handling the probe of the Durkee estate claim, declared the Washington man was expected to arrive here Thursday and surrender to officials at the East Cambridge court house.

At the same time Bishop declared that on his visit to Washington over the weekend he again received assurance from officials of the Treasury Department that the $64,000,000 in bonds, forming the basis of the claim is non-existent

FORESTRY UNIT SET FOR CAMP

Sec. Walter V. McCarthy, of the Boston board of Overseers of Public Welfare, will confer today with officials at the Army Base regarding the matter of selecting Boston's first contingent to be put to work in President Roosevelt's reforestation program

Of the 600 men to go from Boston at present, 810 will be selected from the welfare rolls. They will include unmarried young men from 18 to 25, who are supporting or helping to support their families and are willing to allot the bulk of their monthly pay to these families

The other 10 per cent of the contingent will be chosen without respect to age or marital status, the biggest factor in their selection being experience in forestry work or camp management. It is expected the first batch of 50 or 100 men will be certified by tomorrow or Thursday at the Army Base

DUNN GUILTY IN 'L' HOLDUP

Sentence will be imposed today on Joseph G. Dunn, of Windsor st., Cambridge, found guilty by a Suffolk superior court jury on a charge of holding up the Columbia Elevated station cashier.

Dunn was found not guilty on two other robbery charges. His conviction resulted from the testimony of Robert Carroll, of Columbus ave., South End, who pleaded guilty to complicity in the holdup. Carroll was summoned as a defense witness but his testimony brought the guilty finding.

Sons of Veterans Open Convention

Massachusetts Department, Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War, will hold their 51st annual convention today and tomorrow at Lorimer Hall, Tremont Temple. Senior Vice-Commdr. William L. Anderson of Jamaica Plain, a member of Camp 79, Melrose, will present a resolution pertaining to the Buy American policy.

M'KNIGHT TRIAL IS DELAYED

Arguments on motions by Atty Daniel J. Gallagher and Asst. Dist.-Atty. Frederic A. Crafts, which continue before Judge Walter L. Collins in Middlesex Court today have thus far balked the actual opening of the second trial of Edwin T McKnight

It was not yet been indicated whether McKnight will seek to have the issues decided by a jury or a judge. The former president of the closed Medford Trust Co. faces six indictments. Four charge conspiracy to bribe public officials in Medford and Somerville. One charges him with taking a fee in a transaction while president of the bank and the last charges larceny of $23,500 in six counts

The interest in the trial was shown in the number of public officials, past and present, of Medford and Somerville, who attended at the court room expecting the trial would get under way.

SHOOTS WIFE; KILLS SELF

Repeated refusals of his 45-year-old estranged wife to become reconciled with him led Nikanian Eknoian, 70, of Lynn, to shoot her fatally and then take his own life after an argument in her East Brookline, Boston, South End, home, police said today.

The couple, each of whom had been married before, were wed some ten years ago. They separated about nine months ago and since then according to neighbors, Eknoian has persistently sought to effect a reconciliation. Police today are seeking a daughter of Eknoian by a former marriage in Lynn and a son of the wife in Worcester.

Mrs Dorothy Gustafson, a lodger on the second floor of the house, told police she was in an upstairs bathroom when she heard the sound of a noisy argument downstairs. She peered down the stairs to see Eknoian fire twice at his wife. She then heard a third shot, which proved to be the bullet with which he took his own life.

Boxing Has a Heart ↑ Miller Splits Purse
Frank Churchill Finds ↑ Dado Gets Reward
This to Be True ↓ Barry Irish Born

By JACK CONWAY

The boxing game still has a larger heart than any other sport. The boys who toss the heavy punches, as well as their managers and trainers, will often say bitter, cruel things about each other, but they have yet to turn down a brother in need.

MR. BOSTON

There is the startling case of Frank Churchill, a Boston man who has made close to a million dollars in the boxing game with a stable of boxers. Frank left this city to go to Manila in search of adventure. He operated a boxing club in Manila.

One day an undersized Filipino youngster appeared at Frank's club and asked for a job cleaning up the place. Churchill soon discovered the boy could box. The youngster's name was Pancho Villa. He became the greatest box office attraction of his day with the exception of Jack Dempsey.

In Boston alone Villa drew $125,000 at matches promoted by Tom Goodwin and Eddie Mack. He had boxing sparkle, aggressiveness and a terrific punch. I sat at the ringside in New York the night he knocked out Jimmy Wilde in their bout for the world's flyweight championship.

Villa, at the peak of his career, entered a Coast ring with Jimmy McLarnin as an opponent. Pancho had a ulcerated tooth, but insisted upon going through with the match. After the bout, the septic condition spread through Villa's body. He died within a few days.

Churchill later secured another Filipino boxer. His name was Clever Sencio. He died following a bout with Bud Taylor in the Midwest. Taylor told me recently he believed exhaustion rather than punches killed the little Filipino.

Churchill also managed Tod Morgan who won the world's junior lightweight championship.

Churchill Stricken by Paralysis

The ill luck that followed his boxers finally caught up with Churchill. He was stricken by paralysis. Frank, however, still had a few boxers under his management, and he kept them active. What he received from their earnings helped pay the doctor bills and for the upkeep of a small ranch he has in California.

When Freddy Miller was proclaimed world's featherweight champion by the National Boxing Association, Churchill guaranteed him $4000 to meet Speedy Dado, one of the boys under his management. Churchill did not have $4000 at the time, but he felt the show would draw enough to enable him to give the champion his guarantee. The match was dropped in at Los Angeles.

Perhaps the earthquake also hit the boxing game in Los Angeles. Anyhow there was not $4000 in the house when it was time for Miller and Dado to enter the ring. The promoter had agreed to give Churchill 60 per cent of the gate. This amount was only $2100. Not even enough to pay Miller, with nothing left for Dado.

Pete Reilly manages Miller. They call Pete the "Silver Fox" of the boxing game. He has a reputation of ending up with all the money when a match is over.

Reilly used to manage Andre Routis when the latter was world's featherweight champion. He matched him with Bat Battalino, and when the decision went to Battalino it was found the "Silver Fox" also controlled the Battalino management. Reilly admitted this fact, but said it had been an honest fight. The better man had won.

Reilly Gives Dado and Churchill Part of Purse

When Reilly and Miller were informed Churchill could not pay the $4000 guarantee, Pete said he would take 60 per cent of the gate, and give back one-third of it to Dado. It was a hard, gruelling bout and Miller won the decision.

"Let us split the purse with Dado," said Miller back in his dressing room "That will give Frank Churchill a few dollars, too."

Reily readily consented to this arrangement. Instead of getting his $4000 guarantee Miller split $2100 with Dado and Churchill. When Churchill received news of what happened, back in his sick room, he probably felt that the boxing game was not so bad after all.

Random Shots at the Target

Eddie Mack was in with the information that Red Barry, who battles Babe Hunt at the Arena a week from tonight, is the first Irish born heavyweight to show in America since the days of Jim Coffey . . . In his last Boston bout, Hunt defeated Bob Moody who was supposed to be going places . . . They are calling Chocolate Bon-Bon, who meets Victor Lotti in one of the tens on the Schmeling-Dempsey card, a new Joe Walcott . . . He will be okay if it is 3-2 per cent as good as Joe . . . Paul Schlossberg says Pickles Heintz, who meets Jack Lightfoot, is a first class scrapper . . . Johnny Buckley now directs Heintz . . . The Rangers will try to pick off another Leaf tonight, but I am going to string along with Toronto . . . Few hockey teams lose three games in a row . . . The hard series with the Bruins took a great deal out of the Maple Leafs . . . Warmer weather for the Braves-Giants opening tomorrow will be appreciated . . . Eddie Mack is trying to match Adolph Heuser with Maxie Rosenbloom for the world's light heavy weight championship.

Big Leaguers' Friendship, Enmity on Field Banned

Chicago, April 11 (AP)—The American League heartily endorses the move of the National League warning players against fraternizing on the baseball field, President Will Harridge said today.

"For the past four years, we have warned the players against too much friendliness on the playing field," President Harridge said. "When the boys are in the fight and ready for a game, friendship should cease, and they should play hard to win."

President Harridge also revealed he had dispatched a stern warning against too little friendship, too. All managers were informed that any player assaulting another would be suspended without pay for 30 days.

The rule against the bean ball also will be vigorously enforced with fines and suspensions, he said.

Report for Grid Practice at Brown

Providence, R. I., April 11 (AP)—Spring football practice was resumed today at Brown after an annual of six years with a green squad of 42 men reporting to Tuss McLaughry. The practice will last four weeks.

Derby Nominee Is Lexington Victor

Lexington, Ky., April 11 (AP)—Captain Red was the first nominee for the 1933 Kentucky Derby to win a race in Kentucky this spring. Racing against a small field which included older horses, he finished half a length in front of Scream in a Futurity course sprint Monday.

Nominated for the $50,000 added stake at Churchill Downs May 6, Captain Red gave his backers something to talk about by running the distance in 1:09 2-5, one second short of the track record.

Faced by elimination from the Fontaine Cup series if defeated, the Boston Cubs will apply every ounce of pressure against the Philadelphia Arrows in the third game of the Canadian American League playoffs tonight at the Boston Garden.

After bitter struggles, the Arrows won the verdicts in the first and second games, played in Philadelphia.

Though the Arrows were top heavy favorites to win the Can-Am title, the Cubs have battled gallantly to bring the Fontaine Cup to Boston. In both previous contests the Arrows were victorious by a margin of one goal.

Jack Pratt, a Bruins and Cubs discard, scored the only goal of the first game while three goals in the middle period of the second game were responsible for the Arrows piling up a two game advantage.

CUBS AT PEAK IN CUP PLAY

Since the playoffs started, the Cubs have been playing their best hockey of the season. They eliminated the Rhode Island Reds, generally admitted to be a more formidable sextet, in the first round and forced the Quaker City tribe to battle through the entire 60 minutes of both of the finals to gain the edge.

Back on their home ice, the Cubs are confident that they will take the Arrows into camp. Visiting clubs are at a big disadvantage in Philadelphia, where the home team is supported by rabid fans and always plays its best hockey. That the Cubs were able to hold the Arrows to one goal in each contest is a wonderful tribute to their fighting ability.

Because their backs are to the wall and tonight's contest may be the final opportunity to square accounts with the Arrows, the Cubs will probably lay on the wood in old time form.

After every game they played in Philadelphia this season the Cubs have been loud in their protests against the antics of the Arrows. Most of the injuries suffered by the Cubs this season occured in the Quaker City, where the Arrows are far more belligerent than when playing away from home.

COOK STARRING CENTER

Manager George Boucher will start Bud Cook at center, flanked by Ted Saunders and Roy Burmeister, with Myles Lane and Joe Jerwa on the outer defense, and Percy Jackson in goal.

For the Arrows, Tommy Anderson will open at center, with Yank Boyd and Paul Runge, two ex-Cubs and the leading scorers of the Can-Am loop, on the wings. George Nichols and Frank Peters will be at the points, with Wiffie Cude in the nets.

The Cook line has been clicking in championship form since the start of the playoffs and, because it did not figure in either of the Saturday night goals, is due to contribute tonight.

Peggy O'Neil will center on the second Cub line, with Sheldon Buckles and Donnie Weir assigned to the wing berths, while Jack Pratt will be the playmaker of Herbie Gardiner's second choice front wall, with Billy Hudson and Bat Phillips as his flankmen.

The Cubs have an unusually strong third line in Tommie Fillmore, Frank Jerwa and Dick Benson. Through the absence of Red Conn of the Arrows Jack Pratt and Dick Anderson will be obliged to do double duty, centering for Wilson and Collings. On the other hand, the Cubs have but one spare defense man, Pinkie Davie, while Desmarais and McGoldrick will relieve Nichols and Peters.

Sonny Pins Jenkins

Portland, Me., April 11 (AP)—Gus Sonnenberg tossed George Jenkins in straight falls, the first in 29 15, and the second in 9-55. Flying tackles did the damage.

Spike Wound Infection Benches Jimmy Foxx

Philadelphia, April 11 (AP)—On the eve of the opening of the championship season, both the Phillies and Athletics have a star player on the hospital list—Capt. Pinkey Whitney and Jimmy Foxx.

Whitney pulled a muscle from a rib in Baltimore and has been ordered to remain in bed. It is possible the third baseman may not appear in the opening series with Brooklyn at this city.

Foxx champion home run hitter of the major has an infection in a spike wound on his left shin.

He was in a hospital today for treatment but hoped to help the A's open the season in Washington.

Foxx received his injury in a game in the South. It seemed to heal, but in the last few days a swelling appeared, and Connie Mack ordered him to see a doctor.

Joe downed the youngster for the first fall with a new grip, declared to have been invented by himself, an underarm headlock. It so dazed Fraley that the second fall came 40 seconds later.

HARVARD GRADS PLAY B. C. NINE

Undaunted by their defeat at the hands of the Red Sox, the Boston College baseball team gets down to business this afternoon in preparation for the game with the Harvard Grads on Saturday afternoon.

One feature of the practice this week will be the new diamond. The Eagles played on a diamond for the first time this year when they played the Hose.

The Boston College nine has the power to hit this year, as was demonstrated against the pitching of the Sox, where the Eagles collected eight bingles.

The all-football outfield of Johnny Freitas, Bill Boehner and Bob Curran, promises to team up well.

Three special bouts are carded and six 10-minute preliminaries.

TAP'S TIPS

Baer in N. Y.; Seeking Only 'Honor, Glory'

New York, April 11 (AP)—Max Baer, all 218 pounds of him, arrived today from Livermore, Cal., with a pain in his neck but a very deep urge to get to work for his fight with Max Schmeling June 8 in the Yankee Stadium.

Bam Ready to Go!

New York, April 11 (AP)—A war-like bellow, hasso profundo because of a sore throat, rumbled from Babe Ruth's massive chest today as he contemplated his 20th major league campaign and promised confusion for the belittlers who say he's through.

"Through?" he snarled, "these guys are crazy again. Through? Not by plenty, kid!"

The pain in the neck came from a smack on the side of his head with a sandbag which slipped from its pulleys a couple of weeks ago while Baer was working out in California.

Although he tips the beam at 218 now, he expects to fight Schmeling at 210 pounds after six weeks of training at a camp not yet decided upon. It will be the longest training siege he ever has undergone.

He was very gay as he arrived with one trunk and 14 bags which was in keeping with the title of "best dressed fighter on Broadway" which he won a couple of years ago.

He disclaimed any interest whatever in the monetary features of his match with Schmeling.

"I work only for the honor and glory, not for the money, and to keep my managers out of the breadline," he declared.

Incidentally his managers have been cut to two from an all-time high of six.

Bucco-Reds Clash in N. L. Race Start

Cincinnati, April 11 (AP)—The National League's two extremes—so say the critics—come together here tomorrow in the opener that sends the Pittsburgh Pirates, pennant favorites, against the Cincinnati Reds, whom the experts pick for the cellar again.

George Gibson has selected Bill Swift to pitch the opener and Earl Grace to catch. Si Johnson and Ernest Lombardi are slated for the Cincinnati batteries.

Beer, an attraction missing for 13 years, will be offered but it must be served at tables.

Warneke and Dean to Clash in Opener

Chicago, April 11 (AP)—Chicago's championship Cubs and the St. Louis Cardinals open their National League pennant drive on Wrigley Field tomorrow with their star freshmen Lonnie Warneke and "Dizzy" Dean, apparent starters on the pitching mound.

Pres. Roosevelt to Attend A. L. Opener in Washington

Washington, April 11 (AP)—Tabbed by dopesters as the strongest pretenders for the Yankee's crown, the Philadelphia Athletics and the Washington Senators today put on the finishing touches for a ding-dong opening battle to morrow.

President Roosevelt will toss out the first ball to start the 1933 season.

Connie Mack, the A's leader, and Joe Cronin, the Nat's youngester manager who was nursing a bruised ring finger today, have labeled their teams pennant possibilities.

Lefty Groves for the Athletics and Al Crowder for the Senators probably will be the starting pitchers.

Fans will have to take their baseball without beer at the ale sale has been prohibited in Griffith Stadium.

PRO WRESTLING IS EXILED FROM ILLINOIS

SPORTS

Terry Knits Lively Group of Giants. Pro Baseball Spells 'Through' Too Early.

—By BILL CORUM—

New York, April 11 (US)—At the Polo Grounds we got our first look at the 1933 Giants—Bill Terry's Giants, the first Giants in my memory, and probably yours, that were not McGraw Giants. They looked all right.

Terry deserves credit. He has gone ahead in the face of obstacles and put together a lively looking team. How good a team it really is, the Robins, Cubs, Pirates, Phillies and Cardinals will eventually find out.

PAY DAYS START

Tomorrow will mean more than the opening of the new season in the life of the players. It is also the day on which they start drawing pay again.

It's a nice life ball players lead. You don't really realize how nice until you travel with them. I have sometimes wondered if it wasn't too nice; if having everything done for him doesn't somehow deaden initiative and ambition in a young man.

How else would you explain that once fairly launched in the professional game they rarely do anything but play ball.

I have seen dozens of young doctors, lawyers, dentists, engineers and chemists run out for the big leagues, and if they clicked it was pretty apt to be the end of their professional aspirations and career.

I suppose it is the easier money and, as Tim Hurst said, the softer hours.

There must be more, but offhand I think of only two ex-major leaguers who have made good in what you would call a big way in an entirely new line of endeavor after their play-days were over.

ROXEY, SUNDAY SUCCEED

Roxey is one, and h. was only a short time and run-of-the-mine player. Billy Sunday is the other. Billy made many a sinner hit the sawdust trail after he, personally, had thrown a hitting the trail for center field

And, of course, there are any number of former players who have made money out of business and investments both during their careers and diamond days of fame.

We need go no further than our Mr. Terry, mentioned above, to find one who belongs in the list. When he is not playing that first sack for the Giants, William is a very prime of the business and social world of Memphis, Tenn. He even raises a lusty voice in the choir and directs the band and his accomplishments

That is in the winter time. In the summer he sings "Willow, Weep for Me," to the National League pitchers.

But I am forgetting the moral of my story, which was that soft as it may be, and undoubtedly does appear, playing professional baseball for a living also has its drawbacks.

In the majority of cases it seems to mean that a fellow is through at 35, which is too young to be through, in the past 30, and I haven't even gone to the bullpen to start warming up, though probably it is high time I did.

INSINUATIONS DISTURB

No doubt you were shocked to hear insinuations that there was something wrong with the Jimmy Londos-Joe Savoldi wrestling match in Chicago the other evening. Some of the boys are saying it wasn't on the level.

However you may have felt about it, I know that I am going to be a long time "recovering from the insinuations as to suspensions that are being so freely handled about. My faith in mankind has been grievously shaken. If wrestling is not on the level, where can a man turn to get a square deal for his money?

And tell me Messrs Geiger and Brown, were the little boys of Chicago following Savoldi around the streets, begging: "Say it ain't so Joe, say it ain't so?" I trust so. We must preserve our finer institutions for the youth of the land at all costs

Court Flashes Win in Pinehurst Play

Pinehurst, N. C., April 11 (AP)—Representatives of the "upper ten" of the tennis world met little opposition from their opponents in nearly college players, today as they breezed through early rounds of the annual North and South tournament, heralded as a tryout for Davis Cup team candidates.

BROWNING DUEL WITH LEWIS CANCELLED

Chicago, April 11 (AP)—Professional wrestling was an exile from Illinois today.

After an exhaustive investigation into the match at the Chicago Stadium last Friday night, which resulted in a disputed one-fall victory for Jumping Joe Savoldi over Jim Londos, the Illinois state athletic commission banned professional wrestling indefinitely in the state.

A card, offering Jim Browning and Ed "Strangler" Lewis at the Chicago Coliseum tonight, was ordered cancelled.

The banishment order was the most drastic ever tossed at wrestling in Illinois, where the sport had made rapid progress as a crowd attracter despite the pile that a match could be labelled a championship battle.

Savoldi, whose victory over Londos was an upset comparable to the victory of the late Wayne "Big" Munn of Nebraska over Lewis several years ago, was awarded the fall by the commission, which upheld the decision of Referee Bob Managoff.

All kinds of rumors, the most persistent of which was that the Savoldi victory was a neat case of double crossing by someone, flew about today but it was just a case of where you sat.

WAITING ROOMS FOR HURLERS, GOWDY PLAN

By JOE CASHMAN

Sergeant Henry Gowdy, whose able coaching is responsible for the effectiveness of the Braves' pitching staff, has popped up with one of the most sensible baseball suggestions ever to reach these ears

During 20 years of service in the majors, Of Hankus Pankus had seen many a pitcher ruined for a whole season, if not for life, as a result of catching cold in spring games. Magnates and managers take it for granted that hurlers must run the risk just as long as the schedule makers insist upon starting campaigns so early, but the Sergeant disagrees

He asserts that the danger could be entirely eliminated merely by attaching a heated room to every players' bench and keeping the flingers confined therein when not on the mound or batting

"It's ridiculous," says Henry, "who know plenty of four-bit words, "to train pitchers for a month in the sunny South and then suddenly expose them to the Northern climate as this time of year.

ARM STRAIN PROBABLE

"It's a common occurrence for a flinger to get up a good sweat on the mound and then be forced to sit around the bench while the temperature is flirting with the freezing point. He gets cold and stiff and he's always in danger of seriously straining his arm when he resumes tossing.

"There's no reason why some kind of a shelter, just warm enough to keep them sweating when they're off the field, could not be provided for the pitchers to use on chilly days. Keep them warm and loose while they're resting, and the weather will never bother them.

"Custom cuts a lot of ice in baseball, Gowdy was laughed at when they were first used. So were masks, chest protectors and shin guards. So, too, will my plan, unless I'm greatly mistaken Some day, however, I think it will be tried and a lot of owners are going to be sorry they waited so long to adopt it."

Hankus may be right, had an idea back in '17 that will be remembered as long as the game is played. Then the rest of the boys were waving flags and playing benefit games for the soldiers, he was busy at his catcher's equipment and became the first major league player to enlist

He was smart then and, if you ask us, his plan to protect pitchers proves that he still has a good head for something more than to hang his hat on

And now for a little spot baseball

TRIBE FACES CRUSADERS

Today, the eve of the regular 1933 big league races, finds the Braves battling the Holy Cross collegians in Worcester and the Red Sox departing for New York after a brief limbering-up drill at the Fens.

Manager Bill McKechnie will use his regular lineup against the Crusaders. After putting them through a snappy Monday workout at the Wigwam he's satisfied they'll be on edge for the Giants tomorrow if they don't run into a defense again until then

Several of his starting pitchers, however, are in need of exercise and he plans to use Brown, Fallenstein and possibly Seibold today. Either Betts or Brandt will open the season, with the odds favoring the former.

The Sox had a good workout Monday while beating Boston College, 9 to 2, but Johnny Hodapp and Merwin Shea, alone of the players who will open against the Yankees saw action So the regulars will be sent over the hurdles for a final tuning-up just before taking the 3 p. m train for Gotham.

CRIMSON NINE FACES STIFF SCHEDULE

Coach Fred Mitchell will stand pat on his Harvard varsity lineup for the Boston University game on Saturday. His club showed plenty of rough spots in its opening contest, but Mitchell has begun the polishing off exercise

Taking advantage of one of the few days of sunshine of the spring season Mitchell sent the squad through a long workout at Soldiers Field

Mitchell isn't any too confident over Harvard's chances. With a long list of games ahead which will not be ended until late in June, during which time the Crimson will meet every member of the Eastern Intercollegiate League twice, Harvard's diamond machine is up against its toughest proposition in years

Graduation opened a big gap at second base where Barry Wood and Buddie Fears, shortstop and secondsacker, were lost. Phil Hunt, boxing ace, and Charlie Sargent, hard hitting sophomore, are filling the positions

Hany Thompson, third base is the only infield veteran, although Frank Gleason saw some service a year ago.

Captain James McCaffrey, Ted Lupen and Johnny Ware will hold down the outfield berths

The Harvard junior varsity diamond squad reported for the first time yesterday afternoon

BURKE BLASTS P. G. A. CHOICES

New York, April 11 (AP)—Billy Burke, 1931 National Open champion, hit back at the Professional Golfers' Association today by declaring that board failed to place him on the U. S Ryder Cup golf team which will meet the British at Southport, England, in June

"Say, if records mean anything, that team was made up wrong," Bill said, "There's nothing I can do about it now, but I agree with the Metropolitan in every point of his protest."

"Excluding Gene, I'm willing to match any record in an golfer in this country, or the world for that matter. Remember, I won my qualifying matches for the Ryder Cup play and then the Professional Championship of the British team. And that 7 and 6 score means something.

"Let's find out the National Open and the Glen Falls Open."

Burke did not compete in any of the PGA tournaments this winter because he had to work.

Marathon Trails

By GEORGE UNDERWOOD

CHAPTER VIII

Sports, outside of our national pastime, baseball, the college favorite, football, and racing, whose name of interest steadily are fed by desire for financial profit moves in cycles.

Public interest in boxing and wrestling in particular ebbs and flows.

The high-water mark in marathon was reached in 1908 when world-wide interest and enthusiasm was aroused by the dramatic incident in the London Olympic marathon from Windsor Castle to Shepherds Bush.

Not since the Sullivan-Corbett fight had the United States been stirred by any competition as it was by the Hayes-Dorando episode.

Dorando-Pietri was a little raven haired, dark eyed Italian from Sharkal, Italy, which also was the birth place of Johnny Dundee.

Dorando Pietri was another black-haired little mite of a lad, who worked as a baker's boy in the hamlet department of a big New York store.

DOWN WENT DORANDO

Dorando collapsed as he entered the stadium at Shepherds Bush at the finish of the Olympic marathon in 1908. British officials violated all rules by picking him up and assisting him to his feet. Again Dorando fell. Once more he was picked up. As he was about to the finish of the Olympic marathon he and figuratively carried him across the line just ahead of the American, Johnny Hayes.

Dorando was declared victor, but the vehement American protest, backed by impartial delegates from other countries, resulted in the decision being reversed and Hayes officially being adjudged the Olympic winner.

America was stirred to a frenzy by the attempt to deprive Hayes of a merited triumph The little New York boy became the hero of the hour. Upon his return he was given a great public reception in the city hall, the only time in New York. Whole pages were devoted to newspapers throughout the country to Hayes, Dorando and marathoning.

MARATHON MAD.

It started a marathon craze. Marathon races were held in every burg and hamlet throughout the land. Hayes and Dorando succumbed to the lure of the dollar and turned professionals.

A string of professional marathons were held. The whole country went marathon mad. They even wrote marathon songs.

Little Johnny Hayes now is a sedate mixmaster and playground director in New Jersey.

Dorando Pietri runs a bakeshop in his old home in Sharkal, Italy. Over the door of his shop there is a sign which says in Italian, "Pats Pede"

"Pats Pede" means "made by the feet." It is a nice thrifty way of informing the world that Dorando established the baker shop through money won in marathons.

SUBMARINE ACE AT Y POOL

Cecil Mohawk, claimant of the world's underwater swimming championship, will give a "human seal" exhibition at the Boston Y. M. C. A. pool tomorrow evening, starting at 8 o'clock.

Mohawk, now in his late fifties, features himself in a branch of swimming considered too dangerous to enter into the books of the Olympic games.

Among his laurels are the award for swimming under water upside down, traveling 172 feet in one breath; swimming 378 feet under water at one breath; swimming under water backwards and on his stomach. 158 feet in one breath and swimming one mile with a total under water time of 55 minutes

It is because of the danger of bursting blood vessels that this particular phase of swimming has been barred from international competition.

TUFTS DIAMOND HOPES HIGH

Coach Ken Nash, after more than a week's delay because of wet weather and poor grounds, takes his Tufts diamond squad to the Oval, this afternoon, for the initial outdoor practice.

Eddie Ralph appears slated for the right field berth, Johnny Grinnell and Sammy Claymen have been assured of center and left respectively.

The first string battery will consist of Felix Andruszkawiecz and Bill Ingraham, with a fine infield of Ed Batchelder at first, Art Yavarro at second, Ollie Borden at short, and Harold Kasse at third. Indications point to the Jumbos having a successful season, for there is an abundance of material, three pitchers being almost on a par with Andruszkawiecz.

Devens Faces Yale Batsmen Today

New Haven, Conn., April 11 (AP)—Coach Joe Wood revamped the batting order of the Yale nine in preparation for the exhibition baseball game here today with the Yankees.

George Parker will start on the mound for the Elis, while the Yanks are expected to use Charlie Devens, who pitched Harvard to victory last year over Yale.

Middlesex, Tufts in Lacrosse Fray

The Middlesex club lacrosse team meets the Tufts eleven this afternoon on the Tufts freshman field, in the first practice game of the season for the Jumbos.

Dry Fly Rod Included in Contest Awards

By WIN BROOKS

V. C. Isola and Victor Kiefbeck of the Maine Development Commission had landed in town from Augusta today with the prizes in the Boston Evening American-State of Maine "Ice-In-Out Contest," and I can tell you a little more about them.

The prize for the person coming closest to the actual minute Moosehead Lake is cleared for fishing is a Thomas dry fly "Dorigo" rod, 6 feet, 9 inch length, 5¼ ounces in weight, offered by the Thomas Rod Co., of Bangor.

TACKLE BOXES FITTED

The prize for Grand Lake, donated by Dakin Sporting Goods Co., of Bangor, and Bill Burgess of Minot, is a green metal tackle box, 14x6½x6 inches, with folding tray, equipped with a 100 yard trolling reel, 100 yards of trolling line, nine spinners and 3-foot braided copper trace.

The prize for Great Pond, donated by Edwards & Walker, of Portland, is a green metal tackle box, 14x6½x6 inches, with folding tray, one of the new "round-cornered" flyrods fitted to carry 51 flies, one dozen flies, leader box, line greasing, 30 yards of double tapered fly line size D, two six foot tapered leaders and a pair of combination fly dressers and leader nippers.

The prize for Square Lake, donated by L. L. Bean of Freeport, is one of the popular Bean fishing coats, which has a detachable canvas creel or pack on the back, and more pockets than Scourdnahunk stream. This has come along in size 42, but if the winner happens to need a larger or smaller size, it will be exchanged.

WEEK-END TRIP AWARD

Unfortunately, Isola and Kiefbeck could not bring down with them the week-end fishing trip which includes lodging, meals and guids at Bosebuck camps on Sawyer lake, and is offered as the prize for the Moosehookmeguntic lake winner. But they did bring a letter attesting the fact that this prize had been offered by F. Perley Flint, the camp owner.

The five complimentary fishing licenses offered by the state of Maine will not be forthcoming until the identification of the winners are established, of course.

When Will the Ice Go Out?

My forecast is that the ice will leave Maine's famous fishing waters as follows:

LAKE	DATE	HOUR	MINUTE
Great Pond in the Belgrade region
Grand Lake in the Grand Lakes region
Mooselookmeguntic Lake in the Rangeley region
Moosehead Lake in the Moosehead region
Square Lake in the Fish River chain

SIMMONS TAKES CREW BERTH

Brad Simmons, heavyweight boxing star, acquired a berth in the Harvard varsity shell today as the Crimson settled down to its final drive before the opening of the rowing season.

Grid Barrows, who had held the number 3 seat during the early stages of training takes Simmons' seat at number 5 in the junior varsity shell. Simmons, Barrows, Frank Swayze, jayvee number 7, and Taggart Whipple, number 2 in the junior boat, have all been in line for the sole varsity berth left vacant by the graduation of Josiah Erickson

Coach Charlie Whitesids says the job isn't settled even yet

Otherwise the varsity shell seems to be permanently seated Henry Russell is coxing the varsity eight with Gerard Cassidy, stroke; Bob Saltonstall, 7; Benjamin Bacon, 6; Malcolm Rancher, 5; Roger Haskell, 4; Simmons or Barrows, 3, Edward Yeomans, 2, and Waldo Holcombe, bow

LEAFS CHOICE OVER RANGERS

Toronto, Ont., April 11 (AP)—The New York Rangers sally forth to the hockey wars again tonight determined to whip the Toronto Maple Leafs for the third successive time and end the annual struggle for the Stanley Cup and the world's professional championship without further argument.

Possibly banking on a comeback by the law of averages, the betting fraternity has established the Leafs 7 to 5 favorites for the third game.

The Rangers won the opening game, 5-1, and made it two in a row with a 3-1 victory here last Saturday night.

Boston University's lacrosse team plays its second game of the season tomorrow afternoon against the Boston Lacrosse Club, at the William E. Nickerson Recreation field, Weston. The fray will start at 4:30.

An interesting incident in connection with tomorrow's tilt is that Coach Sullivan is a member of the Boston Lacrosse Club and will play against his pupils. The Terriers will use "player-control" and Capt. Joe Paterno will run the team.

CRIMSON NINE FACES STIFF SCHEDULE

Coach Fred Mitchell will stand pat on his Harvard varsity lineup for the Boston University game on Saturday. His club showed plenty of rough spots in its opening contest, but Mitchell has begun the polishing off exercise

Taking advantage of one of the few days of sunshine of the spring season Mitchell sent the squad through a long workout at Soldiers Field

Mitchell isn't any too confident over Harvard's chances. With a long list of games ahead which will not be ended until late in June, during which time the Crimson will meet every member of the Eastern Intercollegiate League twice, Harvard's diamond machine is up against its toughest proposition in years

Graduation opened a big gap at second base where Barry Wood and Buddie Fears, shortstop and secondsacker, were lost. Phil Hunt, boxing ace, and Charlie Sargent, hard hitting sophomore, are filling the positions

Hany Thompson, third base is the only infield veteran, although Frank Gleason saw some service a year ago.

Captain James McCaffrey, Ted Lupen and Johnny Ware will hold down the outfield berths

The Harvard junior varsity diamond squad reported for the first time yesterday afternoon

BOY MAY GAIN DAVIS CUP JOB

New York, April 11 (AP)—The feat of 17-year-old Frankie Parker of New Orleans in upsetting two of the United States' Davis cup hopefuls on successive days in the Houston invitation tennis tournament today focused the attention of the cup committee on him with judgment reserved.

The consensus seemed to be that the precocious youngster still had to play a lot of tennis before gaining serious consideration for a Davis cup berth and that he was more likely a choice for future than a possibility of the present.

Parker, on Saturday, defeated Cliff Sutter, the country's third ranking player, in a five-set semifinal and then exerted his dominance over George Lott in the final Sunday with a four-set victory.

Huntington Meets Husky Frosh Nine

With only three afternoons of practice Huntington School nine will play its 1933 opener tomorrow afternoon against the powerful Northeastern freshman combination at Huntington Field, starting shortly after 2 o'clock.

The Huntington squad, includes Salvi Pascucci, Framingham; Andy Buckley, Arlington; Charlie Collins, Taunton; Joe Ball, Brookline; Bill Ney, Boston; Wen Babcock, Somerville; Hodgdon McLeod, Hyde Park and Dudley "Red" Ritchie, Melrose

'THE PICCOLI' WINS NEW FAVOR

Vittorio Podrecca's Puppets Include "The Barber of Seville" in Repertoire

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

Unwilling to pass too lightly upon its first two weeks of, perhaps, unexpected prosperity at the Plymouth, Signor Vittorio Podrecca's "The Piccoli," ventured a third week, startung last evening. Except for the inclusion of "The Barber of Seville," as its principal number, the show revealed few, if any, new gestures. As Signor Podrecca explained in fluent Latin tongue, mixed with amusing English, with 800 wooden actors, and all of them willing to respond to the pulling of a string, the matter of one opera or another meant little to his wooden puppets.

* * *

Italy, of course, is the home of the marionette. It is there that the art of creating wooden figures into human form and graces has gained nation al distinction among those who seek amusement in the by-ways Signor Podrecca had done his part in his own land Baltire mained for Mr. S. Hurok here as a concert impresario, to ven- Hurok ture fame and fortune upon an American invasion by these baffling puppets. By any other manager of polite and refined entertainment, "The Piccoli" might have been regarded as hazardous speculation. Mr. Hurok thought differently, though possibly, in the beginning, he may have had his fingers crossed. But he had not reckoned in vain. With the theater, as a whole, very much immersed in what we may call the doldrums, Signor Podrecca's "The Piccoli" took New York by storm. That, by this time, is moth eaten history. One week followed another — and so it went until the puppets were, in some quarters, accepted as the best actors on Broadway. The art, of course, was Podrecca's; the vision was Hurok's.

* * *

And out of all this has emerged a third week of these thrilling, galloping puppets at the Plymouth. The entertainment, naturally, is primitive, for it is designed to catch the mind of the child and, perchance, tickle the conscience of his bald haired elder. Undoubtedly, although he never has mentioned it, Signor Podrecca must have figured that the boy who loved his Punch and Judy could, in later years, gather a seasonable thrill from a more perfectly manipulated group of puppets doing bigger things in a better way. Memories have a way of taking hold of people, and Podrecca has resolutely played with the idea. The youngsters cry for "The Piccoli"—as they once did for Castoria; the elders reach out for it as a tonic to senile. Oddly, it is the only entertainment in a downtown theater in which the personal appeal stretches from seven years to 70.

* * *

The Barber of Seville was Signor Podrecca's monthly last evening. It is safe and sound opera for even the best of maestros, for Rossini, with engaging melody and a more than encouraging sense of humor, created grand opera on something touching popular feeling. There is little to be said of the Podrecca interpretations beyond recommending the excellent voices which, off stage, accompanied the strutting figures of wood in their colored raiment. The presentation was vocally perfect, and in defense of Signor Podrecca's imaginary actors, I can only repeat the words of a gentle woman to her companion. The setting may be mechanical," she said, "but I've seen worse at the Metropolitan."

* * *

What really makes "The Piccoli" glowing entertainment is not its operatic specializations, but its infinite variety. This runs from operas to ballet, from burlesque to some rather fancy concert numbers. Better than all the rest, is the closing feature, the "Gypsy Parade," which a pianist does things in a baby grand that you never could have believed possible if the evidence were not dangled before your eyes and your ears. "The Piccoli" is not only something to enjoy but, also, becomes a lively test for the imagination

Globe Trotter

Remarkable scenes attending the meeting in New York of thousands of Catholics, Protestants and Jews assembled under one roof to celebrate the opening of the Holy Year decreed by the Pope, are contained in the current issue of Hearst Metrotone News now at Loew's Orpheum. Cardinal Hayes is seen and heard as he presides over the gathering, then John McCormack's golden voice is heard singing the "Panis Angelicus." Former Governor Alfred E. Smith stirs the audience in repeated applause as he hails President Roosevelt as the leader in a world-wide movement against the forces of bigotry and hatred.

There are pictures of President Roosevelt being initiated into the National Press Club in Washington, where he makes his first "cub reporter" speech through Hearst Metrotone News.

Best Screamer

Who's the best screamer? Over at RKO B. F. Keith's they tested a number of lassies, hoping to find one who could shriek as does Fay Wray in "King Kong." Mildred Patterson expert dancer won the test. The judges, listening to the fearsome sounds from stage, had several try again before all agreed Miss Patterson took the cake for doing the loudest and most nerve-chilling yelling.

Mildred Patterson

The girl is now being featured with the Boatsmiths," across the street at the Keith-Boston.

Bevy of Beauties at the Howard

A lively burlesque show is featured at the Old Howard this week. The "Peaches" company has 15 principals. Joe Yule and Charles (Bimbo) Davis contribute the comedy, Joy Ri Cherie is a lively miss and Lillian Dixon scores. Nora Murray, Bee Keeler, Gladys Dahl, Ella Roberts, Peters, Sam Micals, Sid Gold and Bob Sandberg are other stars.

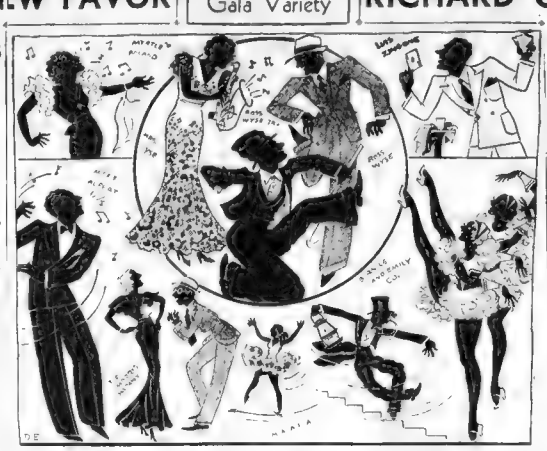
In the continuous part of the program Billy Barker and his Roosevelt Serenaders were the favorites. The Three Olympics have a thriller and Carney and Jean are comedians and singers. The pictures are Joel McCrea and Marion Marsh in "Sport Parade" and John Halliday is viewed in "Men of Chance." The midnight show comes on Friday at 11:30 p. m.

"Over There" Will Be Shown at the Uptown

"Over There," graphic pictorial account of the World War, showing French, British, Italian, Russian and American troops in action, will be presented for the first time in Boston, for three days only, at the Uptown. The first showing will be tomorrow and it will be concluded Friday night. There is no advance in prices for this spectacular authentic picture. As a companion picture to the stirring war film is Jack Holt in "When Strangers Marry." Other short subjects and a comedy and newsreel will round out the program.

Glynn to Present Key of City to Billy Barker

Theodore C. Glynn, of the Boston street commissioner, will present to Councilman William (Billy) Barker, the key to the city of Boston, tonight, at the latter's appearance on the stage of the Old Howard, where the East Boston songbird is leading the Roosevelt Serenaders in a presentation of songs. Glynn will represent Mayor James M Curley.



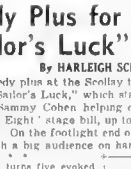
It's another gala week of vaudeville at Loew's Orpheum, currently. There is balance to the bill, plus plenty of talent. The Wyse trio have superb dancing and comedy, and Joe Morris and his aids dispense abundant laughs. Rest of the acts are of high standard.

Comedy Plus for Scollay Fans; "Sailor's Luck" on Screen

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

It's comedy plus at the Scollay this week. Backing up the hilarity in "Sailor's Luck," which stars Sally Eilers and James Dunn, with Sammy Cohen helping out in the clowning, there is usual "Big Eight" stage bill, up to the high Vinson standard of excellence On the footlight end one notes plenty of headline material, with a big audience on hand to pile up the applause.

Of the eight turns five evoked unusual plaudits, and of these five four proved what are termed "show stoppers." Lyle Talbot Twist the audience seemed in satiate demanding more, and more, and more. So Talbot pulls funs amply enough, but with very frequent explosions of handclapping. Will Ritchie opens with a cycling turn, the Ritchies do over big. The two men are knockabouts with many tricks all their own, and the girl in the trio serves as foil, but is forced to take a few falls as the clowns turn their flying feet in her direction. It's a fine act of its kind.



James Dunn

The dance revue is titled "Romance in Rhythm," but by any other name it would be as satisfying as showing cleas in its type. All the specialties score strongly and the tap dancer was a particular hit.

Kay Faye, Irving Lane and Bill Aaronson return with their "Favorite Radio Stars." The act is a broadcasting studio; and the three give sterling imitations of air stars, every one a good number. The act is a triumph for applause. Gene Sheldon follows, affording plenty of laughs by his funny fingers and general antics, and good music on the banjo. The Three Vivians close, their offering being a strikingly good turn by girl gymnasts.

John Charles Thomas

John Charles Thomas will give a recital this evening in Symphony Hall at 8:30. The American baritone, famous both in concert and opera, will be assisted by Edwin McArthur, pianist. The numbers are as follows An die Musik, and Ah die Leur, by Schubert, O Lieb'che Augen, and Der Tod das ist die Kuhle Nacht, by Brahms, Befreit, by Strauss; Wilkommen und Abschied, by Mattinson; Ubende, by Henri Duparc, Nocturne by Maurice Ravel; Folk Song, by Gretchaninoff; La Belle Jeunesse, by Francis Poulenc; Master Bellow a Fancy, by Peter Warlock; Minute, by Ernest Charles; Bob White, and Good Bugs, by Jacques Wolfe; Noe Love by Pearl Curran; When I Think Upon the Maidens, by Michael Head.

"Gabriel Over the White House" for Orpheum

"Gabriel Over the White House" comes to Loew's Orpheum on Friday with Walter Huston heading the elaborate cast. The Norman Thomas Quintette Negro harmony aggregation will head the new vaudeville bill in a fanfare of jazz entitled Harlem-Manor. Joe Burns and Murray Kissen comedians are another important act on the bill, presenting the famous Jimtation Jay Seiler and Frances Wills with Bert Milton in "The Broadwayites," singing and dancing skit, Jerry Smith and Marie Hart in their comedy sketch "The Scream To i and Rossa and Company, golfing jugglers will be among other acts.

Columbia Picks "Biddy" for Star's Comeback; Jessie Ralph in Mother Role

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Copyright, 1933, by Universal Service Inc.

Los Angeles, April 11—Only right and fitting that Richard Cromwell should get another break at Columbia, his alma mater. He was Harry Cohn's discovery and I'd like to see him get a few good stories. "Biddy," a magazine story by Travis Ingham, has been furnished for young Cromwell. It's the story of a college boy whose mother is a charwoman in the fraternity house.

This ought to be a good story for Richard for the first thing the boy did when he was signed was to get a contract by Harry Cohn a couple of years ago was to telephone his mother who had to sign his contract to grab a taxi to Long Beach.

"Take a taxi, mother, don't spare expense. We're going to be rich!"

Lucille O. Parsons

Jules Furthman is adapting the story and Jessie Ralph, excellent character woman, will play the mother.

Real "Dancing Lady"

Plenty of singing and dancing and gay music will enliven "Dancing Lady." Joan Crawford, who was a professional dancer and who admits dancing is her favorite indoor sport, will dance to her heart's content in "Dancing Lady." There is a rumor that she may have as her partner that internationally known dancer, Fred Astaire. Robert Montgomery is her big moment in "Dancing Lady."

Robert Leonard has his hand in musical specials for fair. He has just finished "Peg o' My Heart," Marion Davies' picture, in which there is some of the ritziest music of the year. Now he succeeds Clarence Brown, who will be kept busy with "Night Flight," as director.

Chatter in Hollywood:

A rumor very well authenticated that Marlene Dietrich will appear in a stage play directed by Rouben Mamoullan. This month will see the finish of the Dietrich-Paramount contract and the German actress departure for Germany with her child.

A Line or Two:

Honolulu is calling Mrs. Frank Borzage again. She holds the record for having completed more times to this Hawaiian city than any other person in the film colony. She is taking her mother with her and will take charge of the two shops she owns while her manager is in New York buying for the winter season. That boy Norman Krasna, who has always been one of the most spectacular people in Hollywood, is now supervisory at Columbia. He is 22 and at the moment he is giving Barbara Weeks a big rush. Wynne Gibson has been borrowed from Paramount by Fox for the lead in "The American" opposite Spencer Tracy.

Snapshots of Hollywood

A widely publicized feud ended at Sardi's JOSEF VON STERNBERG, dining with MARLENE DIETRICH, shook hands with B. P. SCHULBERG, who was at the same place with the girl friend, SYLVIA SIDNEY. AL SCOTT has a collection of film prize fights. Attention Hollywood wives and sweethearts, he is planning a ring party in which them AL and COLLEEN lunching at the Beverly Derby. Beer flowed there today and the standing line formed to the right. BARBARA BENNETT and sister, JOAN, were among the few who didn't drink the welcome beverage CLAIRE WINDSOR and MONA MARIS lunching by themselves each welcomed the day by drinking a pint of local brew. MARY PICKFORD'S friends at Pickfair congratulated her on her birthday Sunday. Three important parties in town. The WILLIAM POWELLS gathered together a large crowd at the Little Club at the Cocoanut Grove and pretty MARTHA SLEEPER was guest of honor at an after-theater party in her honor given by J. J. MURPHY. MRS. B. P. SCHULBERG, all Hollywood will rejoice in know, is not as seriously ill as her physicians at first thought. She is in the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital. That's all today. See you tomorrow!

Louella Parsons' column is one of the features of the drama section of the Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Alice Wellman, prima donna in "No, No, Nanette," which will be produced at the Copley, beginning next Saturday night.

Musical Feature of Screen Revivals

By HARRIS MORGAN

One of the finest of all the world's film musicals returned to the Fine Arts screen yesterday. This is "La Million," a superior picture in every way, made by Rene Clair, who is without peer in his field.

The showings of the film end tonight. Owing to the revival week at the theater the regular language class will be held tonight at 9 o'clock preceding the last showing of "La Million."

This will be the only language class this week since The Guardsman" and "Congress Dances" will be both in English. "The Guardsman" with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, will be shown tomorrow only, and "Congress Dances," with Lillian Harvey and Henri Garat, will be shown Thursday and Friday.

The French class will be conducted by Prof. Fernand Pisch.

Exeter Theater

Jack Holt in "When Strangers Marry," and William Boyd and Charles "Chic" Sale in "Men of America," are the attractions for today and tomorrow at the Exeter. The last half of the week Buster Crabbe and Francis Dee will be seen in "King of the Jungle."

"SHARLIE"

Edna Figures to Get Sharlie Job in Office When Another Girl Leaves to Be Married

THERE WERE, she knew, two types of business girls. There were the office slaves, like Edna. Calm, cool, quiet, capable women, who lived, breathed and had their real being only in offices. Women whose adoration of an employer took the place of a thrilling love affair in their narrow lives.

Then there was the sort of girl who works in an office only because she has to, and has made up her mind to have a good time until some man comes along and marries her. This was the fluffy, pretty sort of girl who spends almost every cent she makes "on her back." On smart clothes, the newest thing in handbags and hats, French perfume, the best lipsticks and weekly beauty treatments. She saw them every day. Bumped into them in the noonday crowds in downtown. And envied them with all her heart.

* * *

Sharlie was sitting up in bed reading at 10 o'clock when Edna came home. She heard her talking to her father and Dodie in the living room for a few moments. Then she came through the flat and stood in the doorway of the little bedroom.

"I was sorry to be so short with you this afternoon when you called me up, Edna," she said. She spoke jerkily and she looked very tired, as if she had been through some kind of physical or mental strain. "But I was terribly busy then, and I simply couldn't talk to you."

She came into the room and sat down on the edge of Sharlie's bed. "Mr. Collins' wife was operated on this morning, and the hospital people had me just run for him. I was trying to telephone the garage where he keeps his car when you called."

She drew a long, audible breath. "Is his wife dead?" Sharlie asked, and Edna nodded.

"Put on your kimono and slippers, and we'll go out into the kitchen, and make some hot tea," she said. "I'm so tired I could drop . . . I've been sitting in that hospital for hours and hours. Mr. Collins wouldn't let me leave until he did."

"I wonder if Edna will have sense enough to nab Collins now that he's a widower," Maud Hansberry remarked the next afternoon over a game of Russian bank that she was playing with Dodie. It was 4 o'clock. The dinner dishes were washed, and Edna was lying down in her room. The Hansberrys had come over to eat hamburgers for supper with the Dunns. And after supper Mr. and Mrs. Schultz were coming to play poker. The party was itself again, doing the same things it always had done, seeing the same people, talking over the same things.

In Half-Whisper

"You people had better not let Edna hear you talking about her, or she'll snap your head off," Sharlie said in a half-whisper as she heard the creak of a door at the back of the flat.

Edna came into the room. One side of her face was flushed as if she had been lying on it, and she was dressed for the street.

"Put on your things and we'll go for a walk," she said to Sharlie, with just a nod for Maud and Carl Hansberry.

She waited for Sharlie down in the street, her eyes filled with a sudden sparkle as she drank in deep breaths of the cold sunlit air.

"How would you like to walk downtown and take in a movie?" she asked, slipping her arm into the younger girl's. "And afterward we can go somewhere for a bowl of oyster stew instead of coming back here for supper."

Each of them knew that the bitter detested Maud Hansberry; and both of them were glad to escape from the apartment when she and Carl were there. They grinned at each other in perfect understanding and started off down the street.

It was half past eight when they left the theatre. As they stepped out of the brilliantly-lighted lobby Edna spoke to a girl and man who were just entering it. The girl was blond and gray-eyed, and was very beautifully dressed in gray cloth trimmed with fluffy gray fur.

Hope of a Job

"That's Alice Pope, who works in our office," Edna said, "and the man she's engaged to. She's going to be married some time after Christmas, and I think I can get her position for you."

Sharlie's face clouded. She didn't want Alice Pope's job. She didn't want any job with the Collins Co., where she would be under Edna's eagle eye all day long.

She wanted a place in some office where she knew no one at all. The only adventure in sight for her these dull hard-working days was the position she expected to get when she left the Gerow School of Business—and a position in Edna's office would be very tame adventure, as she very well knew. Edna would throw a fit, as she phrased it to herself, every time she so much as glanced at a man in the office and, naturally, she probably be expected to go to and from the office with Edna every day, too.

"I think I'd rather get a position in some office where I didn't know anybody, Edna," she said slowly as the two of them walked along past the lighted, colorful store windows and turned in at a little restaurant that made a specialty of seafood. "If you get me a place in your office I'm there just because I'm a relative of yours—and that would make them all dislike me, wouldn't it? I think I'd rather start out on my own."

"Well, we can settle all that when the time comes," Edna answered. "No use crossing bridges till we get to them."

But on the first of the year she came home with the news that Alice Pope was leaving at once to be married. She was so pleased about it that Sharlie tried to look pleased, too, when she broke the news at the dinner table that night.

"Sharlie finishes her business course on the fifteenth, and she can step right into this girl's place," she explained to Dodie and Mr. Dunn, beaming at them above her plate of soup. "I talked to Miss Sargent about her this afternoon, and everything is all settled."

The family knew, without being told, that Miss Sargent was the head stenographer in the offices of the Collins Company. They knew all about everybody in those offices, for Edna very seldom talked about anything but her work and the place where she worked. As a matter of fact, there was very little besides her work in her life.

"Your salary will be twenty-two a week to start with," she said to Sharlie.

"That's just fine," Sharlie answered and did her best to look happy.

She did not feel at all happy about the position. She had looked forward all along to her first position with a feeling of freedom and anticipation.

And now she felt as if the very door to freedom and adventure was closing in her face. A job in Edna's office, with Edna watching her all day long, was not going to be very much of an adventure, and Sharlie knew it.

"Twenty-two a week is a good salary for a beginner," Edna was telling her. "And our office is a mighty fine place to work in. Fine people in it—all of them."

Spirits Sank

"Yes, indeed," murmured Sharlie, her spirits sinking lower and lower. She knew that she ought to feel grateful to Edna, but she knew that this was the time to say "Thanks" to her for sending her through the dinner dishes and then finding a fine position for her.

But it was hard to say it. For she didn't feel grateful. Not the least bit. Her heart was heavy with disappointment, and the food she ate that night was bitter as gall and wormwood in her mouth.

* * *

On the third Monday in January Sharlie started her new life as a business woman.

It was a raw morning, gray and wet with fog that seemed to drift in the open door. Her face reflected all the lights that hung above the breakfast table.

"Better wear your rubber coats and galoshes, Sharlie," Edna advised her over the cereal and orange juice. She frowned. "And better not walk into the office with all that lipstick on, Babe. First impressions are everything, and I don't want the people down there to think that you're one of those fluffy flappers. I want you to look businesslike and dignified."

"I might have known she would," groaned Sharlie to herself.

The smell of the rubber garments depressed her as they went out. So did the fog and the crowded street car. Her face reflected in the mirror of the washroom at the office looked pale and unattractive to her, despite the usual touch of rouge and "Ruby 418" lipstick.

None of the names and faces made any impression on Sharlie that first morning. But, as the week went by, she began to know them well.

Miss aSrgent, the head stenographer, was red-haired and raw-boned. Goodlooking in a big romantic sort of way. She had worked for Mr. Collins for sixteen years, and knew everything there was to know about the way he liked things done. Her slang was the slang of twenty years ago. "Swell" was her snappiest adjective, and she was always telling people to "go 'way back and sit down."

To Be Continued.

were asleep in a second bedroom. Pendie glanced around furtively at the extraordinary furnishing. Everything was new from the satinwood twin beds to an enormous red lacquer wardrobe.

"What a lovely room," said Pendie.

"Yes," Fenya answered, "It's nice, isn't it? And there's nothing that's not paid for. No instalment plan for Art and me."

Pendie smiled approval at her naive pride. Fenya went on to extol the virtues of some of her special treasures, to give the cost of each article and to describe the ill-concealed envy of her neighbors and friends at her beautiful home. When she finished, Pendie said:

"But it must have been terribly expensive. Has Art come into money?"

As if Fenya had been hit in the face, the look of pleasurable self-satisfaction vanished and in her eyes rose stark fear. Her hand trembled violently and suddenly she lay back and shook with sobs. After a few minutes Pendie got her calmed and was rewarded with a disturbing story.

Not that Fenya knew much, poor thing. Art had suddenly announced that he had got a job, a good job, working over in Brooklyn as a chauffeur. That was funny because Art hated anything a thing about automobiles. His employment meant much night work, but he was very proud. But since they had moved to Jersey City he had changed. He had grown morose and had taken to fits of silence. He was nervous and jumpy and sometimes even rough with her. He never came home by daylight now and she knew he carried a gun.

Pendie soothed her as best she could and was about to leave when she heard the front door open and guessed that Art had returned.

Thinking that he might resent the knowledge that his wife had been talking to a comparative stranger, she hurriedly gave Fenya the presents for the baby and told her that she would see her husband at any want out so as to give her time to remove signs of tears and emotion.

A dull, hollow-eyed man with nondescript hair and sullen mouth swung around from the window through which he had been gazing. His hand went to his left armpit under his coat and stayed there. When he had grasped the fact that this was a woman and a stranger, he snarled out of the corner of his mouth:

"What the hell's your game snooping around when I'm out? Whatcha want? Trying to lift knives an' forks when nobody's home, eh? Who the devil are ya?"

Pendie told him who she was and not to be a fool. He quickly quieted down and after a few more exchanges tried some clumsy compliments. A moment later through the uncurtained windows Pendie noticed the lights of a car outside which she took for the Lindsey limousine returning to take her home. She told Art she must go for she had a dinner engagement. He insisted before leaving she have a drink to celebrate her visit. Pendie did not argue but as he turned in the sideboard she sidled toward the front door.

She had taken only a step when she saw in the round wall mirror the reflection of the back hall door flung wide. She had entered the room. In it stood two men, both wearing loose drab-colored raincoats. Their faces were shadowed by the turned-down brims of their slouch hats. One man held what looked like a heavy revolver with a metal attachment on its barrel.

ASSASSINATION

Rogers' back was still turned as he poured something from a bottle. With careful deliberation and in complete silence the man with the gun slightly raised his arm. There was a faint muffled cough as he fired. Art Rogers slumped forward and over the sideboard. He made no outcry, but from between his lips came a bubbling whistle. For a second he remained half supported by the sideboard and then his legs buckled at the knees. He half fell, half slid to the floor, but before he reached it the stranger's gun clicked twice more. As each bullet drilled into him Edward Capithorne, Ernest Poole and Howard English will endeavor to argue the former trio down. New England listeners shall be the judges and jury.

SHORTER RADIO SKITS TO BE NEW BROADCAST TREND

Complete Five Minute Features Destined to Have Thorough Network Workout

By N. F. T.

Presenting radio bits of five-minute duration is the most recent idea being considered from all angles as a network practice be produced in the space of five minutes, it just isn't among these the fact is disappointing no little to the "mike" moguls. With a view to keeping time schedules occupied and the cash registers ringing up something other than "No Sale" this proposed short sketch plan has been hit upon. It has even been tried out in a small way.

* * *

Such abbreviated air offerings have been heard recently by these ears. There certainly isn't much, if anything, to find of merit in them so far. Not but what something worth while could kets, fashions, features, sports and special entertainment. As a matter of fact most of them are not what might be declared effective advertising. Any radio program should at least come under one of these classifications. Few achieve both ends.

* * *

PUZZLING PROBLEM

Moreover, it comes on good authority that the interesting bosses actually frown upon the whole proposition of five minute feature doing. Meanwhile from the showmanship standpoint, in the first place it means splitting up an hour that's now given to two half hours of quarters and halves, as at present. Generally, public reaction is wouldn't be surprising if ever increasing volume of the new type of brief song and story periods started coming across the coast to coast network waves from now on. Just how American loudspeaker patrons respond will be quite interesting to note.

* * *

When George Bernard Shaw speaks tonight (WBZ) at 8:45, he will be talking on the Metropolitan Forum Hour from New York. This noted British literary exponent of stinging satire will define politics and science. In a word, he'll tell to him that nobody understands that subject. In any event, he may shed some light on the art, although his humor and sarcasm is what really attracts audiences. Make no mistake, the gentleman is exceptionally learned and extremely wise, wasting very few words conveying his few and far between lectures.

BIG "BUY AMERICAN" DEBATE

Somerville High School students take a Yankee Network turn (WNAC) tomorrow morning between 10:15 and 11 o'clock. The Girls' Debating Society is staging a discussion of the "Buy American" campaign as set forth and upheld by Senator Borah and scoffing allied Hearst press properties of the United States. All Yankee stations while not on public in the auditorium to hear the debate. It is the first time that an educational institution in the city or vicinity has suspended sessions to tune in on a broadcast. As the topic "Resolved: That the American People Should Buy Goods Manufactured in the United States in Preference to Foreign-made goods" will find vigorous champions in the person of Robert Dunn, Frank Conway and Stacy Kenahan. mark there was a slight spasmodic movement of Art's crumpled form. After the last shot, complete and final stillness.

In the second or two this drama took Pendie's mind was in her brain and body paralyzed. Then an unreasoning fury surged over her, rocking everything but the wild sense of personal outrage. Whatever Art had done—to be shot down in the gun slightly raised his arm. There was a faint muffled cough as he fired. Art Rogers slumped forward and over the sideboard. He made no outcry, but from between his lips came a bubbling whistle. For a second he remained half supported by the sideboard and then his legs buckled at the knees. He half fell, half slid to the floor, but before he reached it the stranger's gun clicked twice more. As each bullet drilled into

In the act of unscrewing the silencer from his gun, he was caught at a disadvantage. The metal trimming on the bag cut a deep scratch in his face before his swinging arm sent Pendie hurtling across the room. There she lay in a half-stunned heap, her breath rasping in her throat.

From the back room Fenya Rogers' voice called out in quick alarm and the man with the gun gunmen showed signs of agitation. They turned to go, hesitated. One growled to the other:

"This is a helluva a show. That dame'll frame us. Yuh can't go back for that car with that thing on yuhr mug. Every cop in town'll be waitin' out for yuh."

Pendie felt his hand touch at the blood on his fingers and said:

"Yuh on the framing list, too."

Again he raised the gun and this time fired straight at Pendie across the room. She felt no pain, only a delicious sense of lassitude and peacefulness and then nothing at all.

The gunman had forgotten to replace the silencer. The roar of his revolver reverberated in the living-room. Startled, he did not attempt a second shot, but with his companion slipped out the side window by which they had entered the house. Scream after scream of agonized fear rang out as Fenya in the next room realized what had happened.

More of this exciting episode in the next installment tomorrow.

FIRM AGAINST PAY CUT

Senators Edward C. Carroll and William F. Madden of Boston are two members of the upper branch of the Legislature who have consistently worked against pay cut for public employes. They feel that if intangible personal property, now escaping taxation, were taxed pay cuts would be unnecessary.

Senator William S. Conroy of Fall River is one of the lightest men on his feet in the upper chamber. Prior to entering politics he was a dancing master for nine years. Waltzing with a partner with a glass of water on his head is no stunt for this senator.

Former Rep. William H. Hearn of East Boston is being boomed for the secretaryship of the State Alcoholic Beverage Commission. It is expected that the salary will be fixed at between $3000 and $3500 a year.

Farmers Fight Farmers

Financiers Have a Better Plan

FARMERS POURING OUT ON THE ROAD GOOD MILK THAT OTHER FARMERS WOULD SELL "TOO CHEAP"

This picture illustrates the difference between farmers and high finance in their methods of securing profits and prosperity.

News dispatches tell of farmers on the highway armed with shotguns, sometimes erecting barricades, stopping other farmers on their way to sell milk "TOO CHEAP."

One group of farmers makes up its mind what the price of milk should be. Another group decides to sell it cheaper because feed bills, implement bills, mortgage interest, taxes do not wait, and many a farmer that would gladly co-operate with his fellows and force better prices is unable to do it. Therefore, occasionally, as in this picture, he sees his milk poured out on the road to teach him to charge a higher price, GOOD MILK GOING TO WASTE.

Or if he happens to raise tobacco and refuses to help hold up the price, other tobacco farmers set fire to the shed in which his tobacco is kept. Thus, in an attempt to gain relief, FARMER FIGHTS FARMER.

It is otherwise with financiers. You do not see them denouncing each other, fighting on the highways or anywhere else. They let farmers vote on ELECTION DAY, then they take good care of the people elected, AFTER election day.

They don't attack each other—they praise each other. They stick together in sweetest harmony and brotherhood.

Each financier has, in public at least, only the kindest words of praise for every other financier. And they get along very well, at least until their harmonious methods help to produce a smash such as they are having now.

For the farmer co-operation and harmony are difficult.

From the beginning of history farmers have been feeding the world and getting a poor reward—just now not enough to meet expenses.

Farmers are scattered, isolated, distinctly INDIVIDUALISTIC. Each has his own ideas and sticks to them. He does not want "to be told."

We have had Presidents representing all kinds of things, some representing the Army and Navy and national glory; many representing well organized finance and industry. Thus far we haven't had any President actually and PRIMARILY representing the farmers, most important body of workers in the nation.

That may come.

Prosperity Loan First

President Prepares the Way

By his forthright and courageous economies which are bringing the operating budget of the federal government into balance, President Roosevelt has intelligently prepared the setting for the successful flotation of a Prosperity Loan.

Investors will have greater confidence in the funded obligations of a government which has skilfully demonstrated its capacity to reduce operating expenditures. The new approach to a balanced budget gives the needed assurance that interest and amortization on loans for useful public projects can be provided.

Accordingly, the federal government is in better position than before to create jobs and economic activity until private business is ready to function normally.

By reversing the adverse economic trends, the federal government, in financing and carrying forward public works and semi-public projects, such as housing developments, will provide genuine relief by building up the gross volume of business in the United States.

As the national production again rises, the period of recovery will in reality be self-liquidating because of the rise in taxable corporate and personal incomes.

In seeking to ascertain the amount of governmental spending needed to start the climb upward, James Harvey Rogers, Yale monetary authority, suggestively points out:

"During the early months of the war, through an average expenditure of approximately 700 million dollars a month, tremendous business activity was stimulated. Soldiers' clothing, munitions, foods, and a thousand other articles were bought and consumed in large quantities. Soon the country's economic machine was working almost at capacity.

"Similar activity could certainly be accomplished by like government expenditures.

". . . To the extent that other (private) capital flotations should mount, the expenditures of the government could be safely reduced. Indeed, it should be an integral part of the plan that just so fast as private spending increased, that of the government would be curtailed."

In other words, the government, seeking to end the tragedy of malnutrition amidst plenty, would merely prime the pump. Further delay in applying this economically sound remedy might prove disastrous.

The President has indicated his awareness of this necessary course of action, and should be encouraged to proceed as expeditiously as feasible.

New York Day by Day

Vincent Astor

NEW YORK, April 11 — No celebrity seems so little known to his native city as Vincent Astor. His recent yachting with President Roosevelt was the first time he has been first-paged for years. Seldom in fashionable restaurants or night clubs, he attends about two theatrical openings a season.

Few millionaires' sons escape an exuberant fling along Broadway, but Astor is one who has. In recent years he has spent much time cruising in European waters. His favorite restaurant in Paris is shadowy and sedate Foyot's. In New York he often "rides the pony" at the Grand Central oyster bar.

Tall and straight, he has the leathery tan of the yachtsman. Frequent reports of marital difference between him and his boyhood sweetheart, Helen Huntington, are tosh. Their paths do not always run in the same direction, but those who know them say there is a deep, immovable affection between them.

Astor is 41 and rarely visits many clubs of which he is a member. He has wide knowledge of his vast real estate, but leaves the management largely to others. Biography is his favorite reading. He has sombre moods, but is usually genial, although never talkative.

From the swaying stop-and-start of a Fifth avenue bus top last evening I waved and called to a pedestrian I thought was Tom Geraghty, former Herald reporter, now of the movies. There seemed to be recognition and he swung on and up the spiral stairway. It developed we were total strangers. So I slotted a dime for his fare and in turn he took my order for a set of books before we reached Washington Square. I've got to quit waving to people.

Trenched deep in mental vacuity, I find myself catching at some natant euphony or a rhythmic name to repeat over and over again. I remember my wife fleeing from the glades of Fontainebleau on Sunday because I went swinging through dead leaves of centuries shouting Hilaire Belloc. The name has always struck me as being a perfect mouthful. And an elegant exerciser of the tonsils. Anyway, a fellow fool has just come to solder the ice box. Through the open door and in gurgling gutturals he keeps repeating: "Deutsche Apotheker."

Most people resort to much mumbo-jumbo after the realization of some horrible mistake. The editor of a paper on which I toiled in Dayton, O., once released the pedated plate of an election extra, whirring the presses with news of the victory of the wrong man. For an hour afterward all he could mutter was "Grilled kidneys with chalk!" He never heard such a phrase before and had no idea where he got it.

* * *

Grandmother, in moments of pique, used to say "Shog!" I thought the expletive a variant of "O, pshaw!" But in a dictionary recently I found it—an obsolete Scottish word meaning shake or jog.

I am told that Burton Rascoe, when fatigued by belles-lettres, plays the trap drum or shuffles into a tap dance. There must be a trap drum and tap dance strain in every one whose work is largely mental. Einstein can do a neat jig and the famed Mme. Curie often beat a snare drum in recreative moments. And I do not feel any of us have to be cerebral conscious to feel the marrowy ache to cavort around a stage—there he goes over a sofa!—like a nimble-toed Fred Astaire.

* * *

In a home talent minstrel show years ago Alf Resener and I learned a jig that wound up with what they called a "break." You know, tat, tiddle te at tat (pause) tat tat. With the cap lifted! In a smart-alec moment months ago, I tried to resurrect the routine at a buffet dinner. I got along all right, but something went sour with the final tat tat. Whatever it was, for three days I had to sit at my desk with my right leg straight out to the right. Like this—!

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

Dare to Be Serious?

YES, I KNOW it isn't popular or fashionable. Ever since the war, people who take themselves seriously have been considered a Social Blight. And, of course, there was a pretty good reason. Too many prudish Puritan papas. Too many fussy Victorian mamas. Philosophizing. Sentimentalizing. Shushing our frivolity with their "Life is real - and-life-is-earnest" croak.

And what did all those great, grim gobs of gloom buy us, anyway? Hypocrisy and corruption—which ended in the bloodiest war in history . . . the cruelest waste of human flesh, the foulest betrayal of human faith.

Who can blame us if we came out of that war bitter, vowing we'd never believe in anything again . . . never take anything seriously.

So overnight the world went whoopee! No more earnest talks about The Real Things of Life!

"Forget it—it's the bunk!" we cried. "Eat, drink and be merry—for tomorrow you'll be sold short, anyway! Can the philosophy—turn on the wise cracks! Life's a joke—and so are you 'n' YOU! So—lissen, folks—le's everyone have a party!"

Elsie Robinson

So everyone did. Flaming Youth led the way and we all followed. Or was it vice versa? At any rate, we all went ga-ga. Grandpas and Grandmas toddled and pranced like six-year-olds. Living rooms emptied —speakasies jammed. And anyone who tried to start a Serious Discussion was just about as welcome as a dose of hives.

Then, suddenly, everything crashed. Caught us in the middle of our giggles—smacked us flatter than a last year's waffle. There we were, lost in a darkness that gave most of us the jitters. So then what? Where could we turn—we who needed so desperately to turn somewhere?

Where had they turned—those Old Folks of the gloomy, grim Puritan days? To each other. To the fighting courage within themselves. To God. And so, when life dished it out, they were able to take it straight on the chin.

But we, with all our boasting . . . with all our pretense of game and snappy Youth . . . how were we to take it? How Keep Up Our Front before this horror of sudden darkness? We'd wise-cracked their foolish faith . . . ha-ha'd their Earnest Discussions. Life and Death, God and the Soul's Salvation . . . all that was part of the dreary drizzle we'd brushed away, crying we "couldn't be bothered."

But now we had to be bothered! Had to face things, whether we liked them or not.

And what could we do about it? WE COULD GROW UP!

That was the answer. That is the answer, now, to you in your bewilderment.

Stop being a cry-baby because the good old whoopee days won't come back again! Stop playing patty-cake!

Dare to grow up!

Dare to be your age!

Dare to take things seriously!

You're lonely, you say? Frightened and dizzy? Feeling old?

Then dare to be honest—

Dare to admit and dare to share your trouble—

Dare to talk it over with the other fellow—

Dare to talk everything over . . . everything. All those frightening, mysterious, heartbreaking things we've pushed aside—dare to face them all—

Dare to be earnest about them all—

Dare to share them all—

And, if you do, what will happen? Will people think you're screwy? Will they avoid you, laugh at you—warn others against you?

No, they won't!

Instead, you'll have the most beautiful and comforting experience of your life.

For if you'll be honest with the other fellow, he'll be honest with you. If you dare to confess that you're serious you'll find he is serious, too. And if you'll ask his help, in your darkness, his help will come crashing through.

Just Folks

Prophecy

Who looks at life with open eyes
Must know that trouble yonder lies,
But also at some future date
Some joy will make his heart elate.

The young must age, the old must die.
Gay lips in time must sadly sigh,
Yet youth is eager to grow old,
To claim the joy tomorrows hold.

We have known gladness in the past
And countless charms not meant to last,
And who dare say that it is vain
To hope that peace shall come again?

Beyond us, waiting for us now,
Are treasures we shall find somehow,
And sorrows, though the path seem fair,
Which we shall surely have to bear.

So to the future let us go,
Eager each new day's freight to know,
Certain that down that unknown lane
We shall discover peace again.

A Personal Word; Murphy; War Hawks

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American

AFTER MANY YEARS of editorial writing, I am to have a recess for a time. It is not an easy matter to relinquish work that has been pleasant—and it has been especially pleasant during the period I have occupied these two columns. Under no management I have known have I been granted such absolute freedom of opinion, even to the point, at times, of assuming a position not in complete harmony with the policy of the Hearst papers.

Nothing has been written as the result of instructions; nothing has been the result of a conference on policy; and not once in more than two years has a single word been censored. To a journalist this makes an ideal situation and one all too rare.

The result is that I have never been asked or expected to write a line in which I do not believe. This has been due to the liberality of policy primarily of the owner of this great combination of newspapers. It has been an inspiration to work under such management.

Claude G. Bowers

And it has been a thrilling experience to reach literally millions of men and women from Boston to San Francisco, and to hear from many thousands of them from day to day.

Whatever the future may bring, there is nothing in the past that will be remembered with such unalloyed pleasure as the days of my connection with these great newspapers, dedicated to the economic and political welfare of the masses of the people, and to the maintenance of the Fundamental Jeffersonian principle of the Republic.

Prejudices Born of Ignorance

It is axiomatic that it is difficult to hate anyone we really know. Most prejudices are born of ignorance or misunderstandings. This is true between nations as between individuals. France, having in mind what it thinks is a feeling against her in the United States, has voted an appropriation to be expended through moving pictures, the radio, the press, magazines and lectures in the removing of these imagined prejudices.

There is no doubt that France suffered a bit here because of the comments of the French press and some deputies apropos of the refusal to make the December payment on the debt. But everyone here, while resenting the point of view of these, had a thorough appreciation of the position of Herriot.

It is true that for some years a misunderstanding of the two peoples, that did not reach governmental circles, has been developing. The people of both nations have been responsible. American tourists have returned convinced that the French do not like Americans, and the French, judging all Americans by some, have concluded that we are an arrogant, flamboyant, boastful people, overpleased with ourselves because of our money. (Ah, those old dead days!) Individuals in both nations can do more to remove these prejudices than government.

A Shooting Is More Colorful

One of the plans proposed is to have the right kind of news from France sent American papers. Not nation, however, has suffered more from over emphasis in the foreign press of the wrong kind of news than the U. S. Thus one day the municipality of New York may appropriate millions of dollars for the feeding of the hungry, and on the same day in one little spot there may be a shooting between gangsters. Americans abroad hear of the shooting but nothing of the appropriation. This sort of thing is not a deliberate attempt to misrepresent us; it is due to the fact that a shooting is more colorful and sensational than an appropriation.

Thus we get here the sensational isolated riots in other countries, but not so much of the constructive work that is going on.

But the document setting forth the plan for wiping out the alleged anti-French prejudices here has an amusing side. It proposes that lecturers shall be sent to the United States of a different type than that which has been represented on the platform. The latter type is described in the document as "unhealthy-looking, decrepit, tired, feverish, worn-out, coughing and trembling old men bound into frock coats."

* * *

Rough on Foreign Lecturers

This, we think, is a bit rough on the French lecturers we have seen over here. Take Tardeau for instance. Nothing unhealthy looking about him, nothing decrepit. But still Tardeau is a middle-aged man and the document proposes young men. The old men who have come are hardly fairly treated, as witness:

"They have to be put to bed upon their arrival, with hot water bags at their feet, and awakened just in time for their conferences, when they are rushed to the railway stations with a thousand precautions. That is the reason France is pictured as a tired, worn-out nation."

But Americans do not rush to Paris because they find it decrepit.

And among the old men referred to may be some of the very distinguished old statesmen who have come here for conference — and some not so old. We did not hear that hot water bags had to be put to the feet of Laval.

Mayor Frank Murphy Has a Big Heart

The appointment of Mayor Frank Murphy of Detroit as governor-general of the Philippines will meet with general approval except in certain circles that are, and always have been, contemptuous of the viewpoint of the Philippinos. He is a very able man, with a fine mind, but he has something else that is just as important and rare. He is a humanitarian — he has a big heart. More, he has a natural sympathy with aspirations for freedom and with the underdog. That has made him seem dangerous to a certain element. That is the quality of the man that appeals to me.

An American newspaper in the islands is much disturbed because the appointment has been commended by public men here who are deeply sympathetic toward the islanders. We are more interested in knowing what the native papers have to say. But this we know — Frank Murphy is a live dimensional man with a good mind, a good heart, a humanitarian outlook and we can afford to have such men in the service of the nation.

Beer and Business

Trade Is Stimulated

Whatever the other effects may be, the return of beer has stimulated business in many directions.

Probably 5000 men have been put to work in the beer industry in Boston alone.

Nor does this include the related industries.

The steel workers in the mills, the farmers in the grain fields, the cooperage and the bottling plants, the auto dealers who sell the trucks, the railroad men who move the crude materials and later the manufactured products, the waiters and waitresses in the hotels and cafes—all these, and many more, have derived benefits from the creation of the new industry.

Boston merchants tell us business was enlivened greatly over the weekend.

The hotels and cafes were crowded.

People were happy and jovial, and their decorum was exemplary under the impulse of the new-found freedom.

There was a stir and bustle everywhere. Confidence and optimism took the place of the gloom that had enshrouded us so long.

Our older people came out again, after the isolation of the last thirteen years, and sought the familiar places where they could dine with their friends over a glass of beer.

The national treasury found itself $10,000,000 richer over the weekend, while the States and cities and towns found the new source of revenue to lighten the burden of high taxes resting so heavily upon the backs of home-owners.

A great country so rich in natural resources does not need any miracle to put it on the road to recovery.

The auto gave us a boom period within this generation.

Then the radio came along, opening up a new and rich market.

The dollar bill is important to the extent that it keeps moving.

It is on the move again.

The times surely look brighter.
